AMERICAN STUDENTS MENACED BY ARABS; RIOTING CONTINUES

Consul Appeals For Help; Troops Are Ending Fighting

JERUSALEM, Aug. 30.—Fourteen American students of the art school at Haifa, together with fifteen students of other nationalities, were reported today to be surrounded by unfriendly Arabs along the Palestine-Syrian border where they were halted during a bicycle tour through Syria.

The American consulate general here appealed to the British military authorities to lend their aid in transporting the boys to safety. It appeared that the boys set out on their expedition before the Arab-Jewish riots broke out here a week ago and knew nothing of the danger which awaited them along the roads.

The rioting continued in several points in spite of the British reinforcements which continued to arrive in Palestine hourly. But the troops seemed to have the situation well in hand and additional forces were being dispatched to every point where new uprisings threatened.

A new outbreak was reported from Acre today and the British immediately rushed a detachment of marines to the city to quell the rising and to establish a military center there for northern Palestine. A British corporal told the United Press correspondent that British troops killed twelve Arab rioters at a village yesterday when the Arabs attempted to loot and plunder Jewish homes.

It was reported from various sources that Bedouins continued to gather at the frontiers in small numbers and that they were encamping themselves. Troops from Haifa were on a steady march to all points which seem to be in danger.

The Kistina colony was reported to have been burned to the ground, it was said, and that Dr. Israel, director of the hospital there, had been killed.

The city of Jerusalem was being patrolled by a double guard today as a precautionary measure against a recurrence of the tragic incidents last Friday after the prayers at the Mosque of Omar.

In spite of the new arrival of British reinforcements the undercurrent of uneasiness was apparent among the officials, so much so that Harry L. Trotman, a member of the American consulate at Beirut, Syria, has been temporarily assigned to the consulate staff in Jerusalem to expedite the evacuation of Americans from the danger zone.

A number of American families, which began to evacuate Jerusalem with the trouble between the Jews and the Arabs first broke out just a week ago, arrived safely at Jaffa today, aboard the steamer Canada.

The threatened invasion of Palestine by trans-Jordanian Arabs has been prevented after a conference between British military authorities and the Emir Abdullah, chief of the tribesmen.

The Emir insisted that the British disarm the Jews in Palestine as a condition for his pacifying the trans-Jordanian tribesmen, who were ready to enter the Holy Land. The tribesmen, who had been concentrated at the Allenby bridge for a mass invasion of Palestine, dispersed when the Jews were disarmed.

Meanwhile the British forces conducted a swift sortie at the Arab village Colonia and imprisoned eighty rioters without firing a shot. The troops, aided by the police, encircled the town during the night and completely surprised the inhabitants. The action was intended as a punishment for burning a Jewish village.

Governor Cooper and State Finance Director Harry Silver were attending the fair and it was suggested to them that Vorys should have a plane in connection with his job.

IRISH WOMAN FLYER BATTLING FOR LIFE AFTER PLANE CRASH

Lady Mary Has Chance
For Recovery; Air
Races Go On

MUNICIPAL AIRPORT, Cleveland, Aug. 30.—First victim here of the machines man made to fly, the airplanes, since the national air races started six days ago, Lady Mary Heath, Irish aviatrix, battled for life today with a chance for recovery.

Her condition was pronounced "very critical" at the Lakeside Hospital today but physicians said she might live.

As she lay surrounded by physicians, the air show went on. The program started an hour earlier today because the many events so all the afternoon that several have been postponed.

Lady Heath's accident was the first of any consequence at the air races. Four derby fliers were killed as they winged toward the show but with hundreds of airplanes flying all hours of the day and night there had been no crashes at the airport.

Erwin Kirk, a mechanic flying with her, leaped to safety but was injured slightly.

Kirk could give no explanation of the crash. He said the plane veered toward the roof and he leaped instinctively. Capt. Daniel Glasser, Chicago, an eyewitness, said Lady Heath swerved to miss a smoke stack and then dove into the roof.

First fame gained by Lady Heath as a flier was in 1927, when she made a solo flight across Africa from Cape Town to London. In reality a scientific farmer with a degree from Dublin University, she went in for flying and gained a reputation as being one of the best.

At the age of 32, she had reached the peak of popularity among women fliers when she crashed. She won second in a speed race here Tuesday and took a great interest in gliders, going up in one at every opportunity.

Last January, she applied for citizenship papers and a refusal to pay her debts followed from her husband, Sir James Heath, 76, an Englishman.

The shadow which Lady Heath's accident cast over the air races was reflected when Col. Charles A. Lindbergh demanded that the field be cleared of planes before he started his stunt session yesterday.

The women fliers, all of whom had been in the derby, lined up for their race minus one entry—the one Lady Heath was to have flown.

Bands, endurance fliers, races, take off of another derby and an extra quota of stunting were on the program today for the air fans, who are trooping in thousands the twelve miles from Cleveland airport.

Thomas G. Reid, Downey, Calif., aviator, landed in his solo endurance contest today.

As an added attraction, Henry Ford, who makes tri-motored planes besides light automobiles, was expected to be a guest at the races. Herbert Hoover, Jr., was on his way from the west coast to view the spectacle and may arrive before the day is over.

The Canadians flew in yesterday to steal acrobatic honors from the Americans, who so far have had everything their own way. Three aces of the Royal air force—Lieutenants F. E. Beamish, D. A. Harding and G. R. Howson—kept the crowd on its feet screaming and cheering for thirty minutes yesterday with their aerial maneuvers.

One of the northern fliers dived down from a great height until the wheels of his machine clipped the grass, then headed straight for the stands and pulled up in a loop as everyone ducked for cover.

He then joined his mates and roared through battle formations while the army men watched from the ground.

GRAF ZEPPELIN IS PREPARED TO RESUME FLIGHT SATURDAY

NAVAL AIR STATION, Lakehurst, N. J., Aug. 30.—While New York honored the Graf Zeppelin fliers today a crowd of American sailors pumped fuel and hydrogen into the airship which is scheduled to depart tomorrow midnight for Friedrichshafen.

Captain Ernst Lehmann, Captain Hans Fleming and thirteen others of the ship's company were ordered to New York to join Dr. Hugo Eckener in receiving a welcome from the world's largest city. The Graf remained here in charge of Captain Ernst von Schiller and Gretchen, the duck.

Gretchen is the most ridiculous bird imaginable. She is blue with yellow bill and yellow tail. Pipe stem legs a foot long protrude beneath her body and poor Gretchen has policemen's feet. She is cotton wadding inside and cloth outside and her position on shipboard is in the front windows of the control room where she can trouble sharp eye out for potential keep a

Next in importance, Gretchen comes a plaster of paris Japanese stuffed, a cap band worn by Japanese sailors. Each of these mascots is an omen of good luck aboard the Zeppelin and each is accorded the honor of an appointed place of repose.

Overhauling the Graf's motors began today while riggers completed repairs to the rudder damaged in the take-off from Los Angeles August 27. Repairs and refueling are expected to be completed by noon tomorrow. The Graf may get away any time after 10 p. m. when the passengers have been instructed to be aboard.

Three American naval officers will be invited to make the flight to Friedrichshafen. It was announced. Their identities were not revealed and it was understood selections had not been made. Lieut. Commander Charles E. Rosendahl and Lieut. Jack C. Richardson of this station were guests on the round-the-world trip which ended here yesterday.

DAUGHTER AWAITS FATHER LOST ON LINER

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30.—Carolyn E. Asplund, 22, sat silently in her home in Ingleside Terrace here today as the first light of dawn broke through the fog, awaiting word of her father from a disaster-stricken patch on the sea fifty miles to the south.

Carolyn is the daughter of Captain Adolph E. Asplund, commander of the coastal liner San Juan which plunged to the bottom in a midnight collision with an oil tanker.

Interviewed by the United Press before a brief radiogram had been received from one of the two rescue vessels saying "Asplund down with ship," Carolyn said: "I don't want to talk to reporters. Dad always told me to be quiet and wait if word came that he was in a wreck."

"He is safe. I feel it." "Dad is 65 years old. He retired three years ago. The sea has been good to him. We have this home, sister, dad and I, and we have enough money."

"Dad has been at sea since he was twelve. He was born in Sweden. Mother is dead. My sister, Mrs. H. C. Fogarty, and her 4-year-old son, Kenneth, are all that is left of the family. Dad and I live here together. I want him back! I am afraid!" "The White Flyer people called Dad up two weeks ago and asked him if he would take command of the San Juan while Capt. Winkle was on his vacation. He could not resist the call to go to sea just once more."

Carolyn sat silent, gazing through the windows of the Asplund home into the fog that swirled up from the nearby sea toward Twin Peaks.

"Dad must be all right! Nothing could happen to my father," she said.

PASSENGER STEAMER SUNK IN COLLISION WITH TANKER IN FOG

Wreck Throws 110 People Into Pacific At Midnight;
Captain Goes Down With Ship; Vessels Give
Up Search For Victims.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30.—The Mackay Radio Station here advised the United Press at 5:05 a. m. today, that the tanker S. C. T. Dodd, which rammed the passenger liner San Juan in collision at 11:30 p. m. yesterday, was proceeding to San Francisco.

Search for additional survivors among the 110 passengers and members of the crew of the San Juan apparently had been abandoned.

Radio advices from the Dodd asserted she had twenty-seven survivors aboard and that the freighter Munami had ten.

The Munami and the motorship Frank Lynch are conveying the Dodd to San Francisco.

Radiograms did not indicate whether the Dodd was in tow or proceeded under her own steam.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30.—The passenger liner San Juan, bound from San Francisco to Los Angeles, collided with the oil tanker S. C. T. Dodd almost on the stroke of midnight last night and plunged to the bottom of the Pacific a few minutes later.

The San Juan carried sixty-five passengers and a crew of forty-five. Twenty-seven persons were rescued by the Dodd and ten by the lumber carrier Munami, first to answer SOS calls.

Fate of the remaining seventy-three is unknown.

The Dodd advised San Francisco radio stations at 5 a. m. that she had abandoned the search for additional survivors and was proceeding to San Francisco, sixty miles to the north.

A radiogram received by the Mackay federal station here at 4:07 a. m. said Captain Asplund went down with his ship.

The S. C. T. Dodd, bound from Baltimore for Richmond, oil storage port on San Francisco Bay, was commanded by Captain R. P. Bleumchen of Oakland, Calif.

The San Juan was built at Chester, Pa., in 1884. She was 283 feet long.

She carried practically a capacity load of passengers as she cleared the Golden Gate last night and felt her way southward through the dense fog.

The old ship, which saw her heyday immediately after the war when she was reported to have earned her original cost on each round trip to Central America, was recently relegated to cut-rate carrier trade between California's two principal ports.

Reporters dispatched in automobiles to isolated Pigeon Point, reported that the coast line was blanketed with fog. Lighthouses along the dirt road which threads its way southward heard or observed nothing about the disaster.

Meager radio advices from the motorship Frank Lynch, which arrived at the scene of the disaster shortly after SOS calls were broadcast, indicated that this vessel had picked up a boatload of survivors.

The crash occurred in one of the worst fogs of the year, a dozen miles at sea off an isolated and windswept stretch of mountainous coastline to the south of Half Moon Bay.

The San Juan is believed to have plunged under immediately, without time to launch lifeboats. The survivors had to jump for their lives into a choppy sea, according to radiograms picked up here.

The S. C. T. Dodd was badly damaged but apparently in no danger of sinking.

No one was injured upon the Dodd, her commander advised the United Press.

Captain A. F. Ausplund of San Francisco commanded the San Juan. James Norton was chief engineer. The purser was John Cleveland, the first and second officers were Gully and Olson; their initials do not show on company records.

A. E. Gillespie, of the Los Angeles and San Francisco Navigation Company, owners of the white Flyer line, told the United Press that there was a possibility that the San Juan had cleared with five or six more passengers than those included in the office record of sixty-five, as several last minute tickets usually are sold at the dock.

A log of radiograms from the Dodd, intercepted by local stations, tells the dramatic story of the end of the San Juan.

"11:50 p. m.—SOS. We have collided with the San Juan, she is sinking. Do not know extent of our damage. Please rush aid."

"12:00 a. m.—Stand by. Lowering lifeboats."

"12:05 a. m.—Standing by. 12:07 a. m.—Fifty miles north of Pigeon Point. (This position was later corrected.)"

"12:08 a. m.—SOS. Want coast guard."

"12:15 a. m.—San Juan filling. She will sink in a few minutes. Now picking up passengers. Near San Juan as possible."

"12:18 a. m.—Standing by to pick up survivors."

"12:26 a. m.—Now getting passengers out of water. One mile ahead. Playing searchlight on sea."

"12:35 a. m.—Terrible sea, picking up survivors."

"12:41 a. m.—Many are saved."

"12:43 a. m.—The Munami saved two of her lifeboats. They're alongside ready to be hoisted aboard our boat. Out in quest of more people."

"1:00 a. m.—We not damaged. Out position fifty miles southeast of Pigeon Point." (This position also erroneous.)

"1:15 a. m.—Still drifting off Pigeon Point."

"2:00 a. m.—Taking some more people out of water. Some very weak and exhausted. So far no death reported. Position given pretty close."

"2:05 a. m.—Position about eighteen miles south Pigeon Point."

"2:30 a. m.—Still standing by."

"5:05 a. m.—Proceeding to San Francisco."

LIMA, O., Aug. 30.—Miss Marie Vermillion, 19, daughter of former Sheriff Marion Vermillion of Wapakoneta, suffered a broken left wrist and the amputation of a finger in an auto accident near here last night.

GRAF ZEPPELIN IS PREPARED TO RESUME FLIGHT SATURDAY

NAVAL AIR STATION, Lakehurst, N. J., Aug. 30.—While New York honored the Graf Zeppelin flier today a crowd of American sailors pumped fuel and hydrogen into the airship which is scheduled to depart tomorrow night for Friedrichshafen.

Captain Ernst Lehmann, Captain Hans Fleming and thirteen others of the ship's company were ordered to New York to join Dr. Hugo Eckener in receiving a welcome from the world's largest ship. The Graf remained here in charge of Captain Ernst von Schiller and Gretchen, the duck.

Gretchen is the most ridiculous bird imaginable. She is blue with yellow bill and yellow tail. Pipe yellow legs a foot long protrude beneath her body and Gretchen waddles inside and cloth outside and her position on shipboard is in the front windows of the control room where she can keep a sharp eye out for potential trouble.

Next in importance after Gretchen comes a wooly dog, likewise stuffed, a plaster of Paris Japanese crane and a cap band worn by Japanese sailors. Each of these aboard the Zeppelin and each is accorded the honor of an appointed place of repose.

Overhauling the Graf's motors began today while riggers completed repairs to the rudder damaged in the take-off from Los Angeles August 27. Repairs and refueling are expected to be completed by noon tomorrow. The Graf may get away any time after 10 p. m. when the passengers have been instructed to be aboard.

Three American naval officers will be invited to make the flight to Friedrichshafen, it was announced. Their identities were not revealed and it was understood selections had not been made. Lieut. Commander Charles E. Rosendahl and Lieut. Jack C. Richardson of this station were guests on the round-the-world trip which ended here yesterday.

DAWES CONFERS WITH MAC DONALD

GAS WELL STRUCK

ELYRIA, O., Aug. 30.—A well sunk on the Roger Palmer farm near here was flowing 5,000,000 feet of gas today from a depth of 2,500 feet. Drillers had been sinking bits for forty days when the flow came in.

DAUGHTER AWAITING FATHER LOST ON LINER

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30.—Carolyn E. Asplund, 22, sat silently in her home in Ingleside Terrace here today as the first light of dawn broke through the fog, awaiting word of her father from a disaster-stricken patch on the sea fifty miles to the south.

Carolyn is the daughter of Captain Adolph F. Asplund, commander of the coastal liner San Juan which plunged to the bottom in a midnight collision with an oil tanker.

Interviewed by the United Press before a brief radiogram had been received from one of the rescue vessels saying "Asplund down with ship," Carolyn said:

"I don't want to talk to reporters. Dad always told me to be quiet and wait if word came that he was in a wreck."

"He is safe, I feel it."

"Dad is 65 years old. He retired three years ago. He has been a sister, dad and I, and we have enough money."

"Dad has been at sea since he was twelve. He was born in Sweden. Mother is dead. My sister, Mrs. H. C. Fogarty, and her 4-year-old son, Kenneth, are all that is left of the family. Dad and I live here together. I want him back! I am afraid!"

"The White Flyer people called him if he would take command of the San Juan while Capt. Winkle was on his vacation. He could not resist the call to go to sea just once more."

Carolyn sat silent, gazing through the windows of the Asplund home into the fog that swirled up from the nearby sea toward Twin Peaks.

"Dad must be all right! Nothing could happen to my father," she said.

PASSENGER STEAMER SUNK IN COLLISION WITH TANKER IN FOG

Wreck Throws 110 People Into Pacific At Midnight;
Captain Goes Down With Ship; Vessels Give
Up Search For Victims.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30.—The Mackay Radio Station here advised the United Press at 5:05 a. m. today, that the tanker S. C. T. Dodd, which rammed the passenger liner San Juan in collision at 11:30 p. m. yesterday, was proceeding to San Francisco.

Search for additional survivors among the 110 passengers and members of the crew of the San Juan apparently had been abandoned.

Radio advices from the Dodd asserted she had twenty-seven survivors aboard and that the freighter Munami had ten.

The Munami and the motorship Frank Lynch are conveying the Dodd to San Francisco.

Radiograms did not indicate that the coast line was whether the Dodd was in tow or proceeding under her own steam.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30.—The passenger liner San Juan, bound from San Francisco to Los Angeles, collided with the oil tanker S. C. T. Dodd almost on the stroke of midnight last night and plunged to the bottom of the Pacific a few minutes later.

The San Juan carried sixty-five passengers and a crew of forty-five. Twenty-seven persons were rescued by the Dodd and ten by the lumber carrier Munami, first to answer SOS calls.

Fate of the remaining seventy-three is unknown.

The Dodd advised San Francisco radio stations at 5 a. m. that she had abandoned the search for additional survivors and was proceeding to San Francisco, sixty miles to the north.

A radiogram received by the Mackay radio station here at 4:07 a. m. said Captain Asplund went down with his ship.

The S. C. T. Dodd, bound from Baltimore for Richmond, oil storage port on San Francisco Bay, was commanded by Captain R. P. Bleumchen of Oakland, Calif.

The San Juan was built at Chester, Pa., in 1884. She was 283 feet long.

She carried practically a capacity load of passengers as she cleared the Golden Gate last night and felt her way southward through the dense fog.

The old ship, which saw her heyday immediately after the war when she was reported to have earned her original cost on each round trip to Central America, was recently relegated to cut-rate carrier trade between California's two principal ports.

CONFESSES DOUBLE MURDER AS ATTEMPT TO SUICIDE FAILS

Kills Brother-in-Law
And Sister In Jealous Rage

NEILLSVILLE, Wis., Aug. 30.—Following an unsuccessful suicide attempt, Paul Peterson, 27, was charged of first degree murder.

Two hours after he had been taken into custody on the farm of his brother, William, near Fairchild, Peterson admitted the slaying of his sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Riggs, at their farm home near Greenwood.

Peterson had blamed the couple and their daughter, Mrs. David Jones, for the separation from his wife, who recently sued for divorce at Waubesa, Ill. Peterson's home. Riggs and his wife were killed defending Mrs. Jones, who with her husband, had lived with Peterson and his wife at Waubesa.

Peterson escaped from Greenwood after the shooting and had evaded search until his brother, William, notified authorities he was hiding in a field on his farm.

"2:05 a. m.—Position about eighteen miles south Pigeon Point."

"2:30 a. m.—Still standing by."

"5:05 a. m.—Proceeding to San Francisco."

The car in which she was riding with Orville Ritchie, Wapakoneta, was sidetracked by a trailer on a truck driven by William Powell, Danville, Ky. It is alleged.

"WILD-EYED" REVELER

Actions Belie Appearance Of Radio Director.

FRANK BLACK

(Editor's Note: This is another of a series of sketches of the most prominent radio artists of the day. Others follow.)

By ALMA SIOUX SCARBERRY

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—Some times they call Frank Black the "wild-eyed boy." He looks as tempting as a prima donna about to throw the piano at her favorite boy friend.

But he is, no doubt, the calmest and most unexcitable director on the air. It is a frequently discussed fact that he never has been known to get "het up" over any of the many exasperating things that happen among a keyed-up artistic bunch of musicians. And he is of German-English parentage—born in Philadelphia.

Originated New Arrangements

Frank Black is famous for being the originator of arrangements of scores for quartets that have made "The Revelers" probably the highest paid quartet in the world. He arranges the scores just as he would for instruments—a different arrangement for each of the four voices—having the bass break in just like the bass horn, et cetera. One day and was struck with the way the scores were written so that the instruments came in and blended so effectively. There was no reason why the arrangements for the human voice shouldn't be written the same way. There was much opposition and skepticism, of course. Just as there always is when something new and revolutionary is introduced. Many musicians said it couldn't be done.

But Black trained the Revelers, and their success has been uncanny. They are touring Europe now, "knocking 'em off their seats."

Long, slender arms and hands give the effect of a scarecrow flapping in the wind when the "wild-eyed boy" directs in the studio. He waves and flutters them so fascinatingly that you find yourself forgetting the music and watching him. Both arms and both hands do exactly the same thing at the same time. One wonders what he would do if you tied one hand behind him.

Black is one of the busiest directors on the ether. For he works in an office all day and directs at night. Often he dashes from one studio to another with not a minute to lose. One of the conceits may be a symphony and the other the wildest jazz. He does both with equal talent.

Makes Many Records

The phonograph business brought Frank Black to the air. He makes many records now under various names. Twisted about his reputation for not having the usual artistic temperament, he became confused and ran his long, thin fingers through his hair in a Paderewski gesture. Then he smiled sheepishly: "Now, I don't go through any of that foreign genius stuff. But you ought to hear me under my breath; I burn 'em up, sometimes. I don't believe in wasting energy on childish fits. That's showing off. A good cuss is more effective."

FLYERS ESCAPE INJURY WHEN PLANE CRASHES NEAR OLD TOWN

A pilot and observer from the army air depot at Wright Field, were uninjured when a bombing plane nose dived after developing engine trouble and overturned in a corn field on the farm of J. W. Swadner, Fairfield Pike, three and one half miles northwest of Xenia about 9:15 a. m. Friday.

Although the metal plane was badly damaged, the two aviators crawled from beneath the wreckage unharmed. They refused to give their names.

The plane had circled over Xenia in an experimental trip, and was returning to the air field, following the recent paved Fairfield Pike as a route guide. When it was over the top of Swadner Hill, at an altitude of 1,500 feet the engine began to fail, the pilot said, and several of the dummy bombs, which weigh 400 to 500 pounds each, were thrown out in order to lighten the ship and gain a higher altitude in an attempt to reach the field.

The plane was flying very low by that time and just after passing over the Swadner home, the motor died and the plane went into a tail spin. The pilot was able to right it for a few moments, when it went into a nose dive into the middle of the cornfield about eighty rods from the Swadner farm house, on the opposite side of the road, near the Little Miami river. The tall corn caught the trucks and caused the ship to overturn.

Sheriff Olmer Tate was notified of the accident by Mrs. Swadner, and Road Patrolman L. A. Davis, went to the scene to control traffic at the point and aid in keeping the crowds which quickly gathered, from swarming over the field. Sheriff Tate also went to the scene later.

The damaged plane had a wing spread of ninety feet, and was equipped with dummy antiaircraft guns. It was so badly wrecked that only part of it can be salvaged. Both motors were broken, the wings crumpled and the body bent.

The plane is under guard, and will be dismantled and returned to the field.

"WILD-EYED" REVELER

Actions Belie Appearance Of Radio Director.

FRANK BLACK

(Editor's Note: This is another of a series of sketches of the most prominent radio artists of the day. Others follow.)

By ALMA SIOUX SCARBERRY
NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—Some-times they call Frank Black the "wild-eyed boy." He looks as a prima donna about to throw the piano at her favorite boy friend.

But he is, no doubt, the calmest and most unexcitable director on the air. It is a frequently discussed fact that he never has been known to get "het up" over any of the many exasperating things that happen among a keyed-up artistic bunch of musicians. And he is of German-English parentage—born in Philadelphia.

Frank Black is famous for being the originator of arrangements of scores for quartets that have made "The Revelers" probably the highest paid quartet in the world. He arranges the scores just as he would for instruments—a different arrangement for each of the four voices—having the bass break in just like the bass horn, et cetera.

He was directing an orchestra one day and was struck with the way the scores were written so that the instruments came in and blended so effectively. There was no reason why the arrangements for the human voice shouldn't be written the same way. There was much opposition and skepticism, of course. Just as there always is when something new and revolutionary is introduced. Many musicians said it couldn't be done.

But Black trained the revelers, and their success has been uncanny. They are touring Europe now, "knocking 'em off their seats."

Long, slender arms and hands give the effect of a scarecrow flapping in the wind when the "wild-eyed boy" directs in the studio. He waves and flutters them so fascinatingly that you find yourself forgetting the music and watching him. Both arms and both hands do exactly the same thing at the same time. One wonders what he would do if you tied one hand behind his back.

Black is one of the busiest directors on the ether. For he works in an office all day and directs at night. Often he dashes from one studio to another with not a minute to lose. One of the conceits may be a symphony and the other the wildest jazz. He does both with equal talent.

Makes Many Records
The phonograph business brought Frank Black to the air. He makes many records now under various names. Twisted about his reputation for not having the usual artistic temperament, he became confused and ran his long, thin fingers through his hair in a Paderewski gesture. Then he smiled sheepishly.

"Now, I don't go through any of that foreign genius stuff. But you ought to hear me under my breath; I burn 'em up, sometimes. I don't believe in wasting energy on childish fits. That's the showing off. A good cuss is more effective."

FLYERS ESCAPE INJURY WHEN PLANE CRASHES NEAR OLD TOWN

A pilot and observer from the army air depot at Wright Field, were uninjured when a bombing plane nosed dived after developing engine trouble and overturned in a corn field on the farm of J. W. Swadner, Fairfield Pike, three and one half miles northwest of Xenia, about 9:15 a. m., Friday.

Although the metal plane was badly damaged, the two aviators crawled from beneath the wreckage unharmed. They refused to give their names.

The plane had circled over Xenia in an experimental trip, and was returning to the air field, following the cement paved Fairfield Pike as a route guide. When it was over the top of Swadner Hill, at an altitude of 1,500 feet the engine began to fail, the pilot said, and several of the dummy bombs, which weigh 400 to 500 pounds each, were thrown out in order to lighten the ship and gain a higher altitude in an attempt to reach the field.

The plane was flying very low by that time and just after passing over the Swadner home, the motor died and the plane went into a tail spin. The pilot was able to right it for a few moments, when it went into a nose dive into the middle of the cornfield about eighty rods from the Swadner farm house, on the opposite side of the road, near the Little Miami river. The tail cone caught the trucks and caused the ship to overturn.

Sheriff Ohmer Tate was notified of the accident by Mrs. Swadner, and Road Patrolman L. A. Davis, went to the scene to control traffic at the point and aid in keeping the crowds which quickly gathered, from swarming over the field. Sheriff Tate also went to the scene later.

The damaged plane had a wing spread of ninety feet, and was equipped with dummy anti-aircraft guns. It was so badly wrecked that only part of it can be salvaged. Both motors were broken, the wings crumpled and the body bent.

The plane is under guard, and will be dismantled and returned to the field.

Earl Hall, Dayton, brother-in-law of Bent, who was arrested in Dayton on request of Fred Jones, acting chief of police, was dismissed Friday morning, no charges being filed against him. Hall was held on suspicion of connection with bootlegging activities uncovered with the discovery of a seventy-five gallon capacity still, several barrels of mash and some liquor by police who raided Bent's home early Thursday.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

OUR FATHER'S CARE—Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows.—Matthew 10:29, 30, 31.

PREVENTING TRAGEDIES

The department of commerce has acted none too soon, but has acted well in putting into effect new regulations which will provide that a transport airplane pilot may carry passengers in the type of plane in which he has passed an examination and in no other. Hitherto, it has been possible for the pilot to qualify as the navigator of a small open-cockpit machine, and then on the strength of his certificate get a job running a big passenger plane. This has not increased the element of safety in aerial navigation and travel; on the contrary the condition has constituted a distinct danger, which if it has not already caused bad catastrophes would be certain to cause them sooner or later.

The new ruling works no hardship. There is nothing to prevent a pilot from qualifying for every type of plane, one after another, just as an attorney is successfully admitted to practice in higher and higher courts, and the general result of its application ought to be better and better standards of competency and skill among fliers.

There would be no stock-market acrobatics in aviation circles if it were not for the steady and striking way in which aviation in fact develops. Not much attention was paid by the public or the press to the arrival in New York the other day of the first air-mail cargo from Chile. New York, however, is merely one station on the 10,000 mile airway route that ends in the south at Santiago, Chile's capitol, and in the north at Montreal. The fastest service by steamer would have required eighteen days, and usually a month would be needed, but this came through in ten days, by the cooperation of four aviation companies which have joined in making this "Pan American airway" practicable by the use of airplanes and flying boats over one of the most difficult flying routes in the world. This mail started for New York at Santiago in a plane of the Pan-American Grace Airways. At Lima, Peru, it was transferred to a Loening amphibian; at Guayaquil, Ecuador, to another type of amphibian for the 1,200-mile trip through Colombia to the Canal Zone. At Cristobal a tri-motored land plane relayed the load over 750 miles of jungle to Nicaragua, and from there amphibians carried it over land and sea through Honduras and Cuba to Miami. There it was transferred again for the trip to New York. Another step will be furnishing this service across the Andes from Chile to the Atlantic coast, which is a venture of the first magnitude.

NEW YORK—The oldest savings account in the United States has been unearthed in New York. A hundred and ten years ago, in August, 1819, the account of John S. Thorne was opened at the Bank of Savings. ### WHAT ABOUT THESE?

In the terrific tirade which accompanied his renunciation of America and all its hypocrisies, Frank Ward O'Malley, writer, said: "The United States has never produced a painter, poet, novelist, sculptor, essayist, orator, musician, playwright, historian, scientist or philosopher of the first class."

And immediately Ben De Casseres, O'Malley's old drinking partner in the days of "Jack," arises to confer upon Frank the title of "Ignoramus."

"While I endorse, in the main, his tirade against America," says Benjamin who has yet to take himself or anybody else very seriously, "there is just one spot where he puts his foot in it and reveals his own morosity and unfairness, which are the very charges he brings against this country."

Benjamin then proceeds to list Arthur B. Davies, the painter; Nathaniel Hawthorne, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry David Thoreau, Webster, Ingalls, Bryan, Theodore Herbert, Eugene O'Neill, Poe, Whitman, James Branch Cabell, "Hell" Mencken, and last, but not least, Benjamin De Casseres.

That ought to hold Mr. Frank Ward O'Malley, The Sassy Swiss, for awhile!

GOOD STUFF, ANYWAY

There was an interview the other day with "Ethel, of the Barrymores," in which she was quoted as saying:

"A psychic force has visited me recently and I am afraid of it. I have noticed the difference in the last few months. I have been able to hold them tighter than ever. Something in here"—indicating her heart—"makes me do it."

After reading that twice I addressed a paragraph to Ethel telling her to cheer up that what she'd mistaken for a "psychic force" was nothing but a touch of plain old-fashioned liver.

And now Ethel comes along and denies she ever said it.

Isn't that like a Barrymore!

THE FORD JOKE PASSES

Commenting on the passing of the Ford joke, a New York editorial writer says:

"It really is dead . . . It was here one day and gone the next. No hand was raised against it with intent to kill. It folded its wings and faded out of the national picture. It died when the new model Ford came in. The Ford joke was based on the 'Tin Lizzie,' that little, ugly rattlesnake which was as common as dirt, yet it did inconceivable marvels of national humor. When Ford actually allowed beauty of line and pretension of body to creep into his product, the old joke did not apply . . . We never thought we would miss the Ford joke with its endless percutations and combinations, but we do. It was the universal industrial joke of an industrial nation. It was the court jester of the age of mass production. We ought always to have some symbol like that, rolling down our grooves of national humor."

"Get the money while they're crying." The late Mr. Necker, Morician to the Mob.

THE WAY of the WORLD

By GROVE PATTERSON

ALWAYS THE TARIFF

Few congresses have a touch delicate enough for tariff tinkering. The tariff ought to be handled as a good barber handles a face. Putting a jack under the present bill in one place and piling weights on it in another place just naturally results in getting business all out of order. Wonder what sort of impression a president and congress pledged not to touch the tariff would make on the people? It might make a popular platform.

DON'T FORGET THE RAILROADS

These days we talk volumes and write reams about the newer kinds of transportation—airplanes, autos, buses. We ought to take an hour off and remember that the original giants of transportation—the railroads—did more than any other single force to make this republic what it is today in its wide sweep of industry, business and prosperity. The railroad men of the past generation were empire builders beyond the Mississippi.

COLLEGES NOT CURE-ALLS

In the past thirty years college attendance increased six-fold. But the tide is changing. In the season of 1927-28 the increase was only two per cent over the year before. In 1928-29 the increase was hardly one per cent. The great increase of a few years ago was one of the striking results of a new and more widely distributed prosperity. The increasing fashion of today, however, is to question more and more closely just what education is and just how to get it. A chance at college is worth while and young men and women should be encouraged to take that chance and to work for the opportunity, but a college education is not a cure-all. It does not even provide a good mind.

RISE THROUGH STORM

Death ended the stormy career of Victor Berger, Socialist. There are not many outstanding Socialists in the country today. Times are too good. Berger attracted admiration because he kept the faith with his principle. He had courage, character, personality. He wasn't just a book Socialist. He ran for office and was elected. He gave one the impression of knowing what he wanted. He had the tremendous advantage of a daily newspaper, established nearly 30 years ago, which gave him expression. Men, even though in the minority, can rise to heights when they are sincere, courageous, persistent.

REDUCTION OF DUTY ON PRECIOUS STONES URGED

By EMANUEL CELLER

Congressman from New York (Emanuel Celler was born at Brooklyn, N. Y., May 6, 1888. He is a graduate of Columbia university. He has practiced law in New York city since 1912. He organized a retail meat industry in Brooklyn, the Madison State Bank of New York city, and the Reliance Investment company of Brooklyn. Elected to congress in 1923 from the tenth New York district, he has been returned each term since. He is a Democrat.)

I have recently advocated reduction of the tariff on diamonds and other precious stones, cut but not set, from 20 to 10 per cent and free admission of rough or uncut stones in their natural state.

There seems to be a widespread idea developing among tourists that it is no disgrace to smuggle; in fact, it is considered "smart." One smuggles liquor—why not diamonds? Often we read of ladies of so-called quality who are caught smuggling diamonds. They do it gaily and nonchalantly.

It is difficult to determine the exact cost to the government in its unsuccessful attempts to prevent smuggling. The cost, undoubtedly, is very great. Much of this cost would be eliminated if the rate was reduced.

But there is another evil that would be eliminated with the reduction. We maintain, in Europe, a mild system of espionage. We have spies in some of the European capitals. They are really stool pigeons or Paul Prys. They are found in places like the Rue de la Paix in Paris. The internal revenue laws provide that anyone disclosing evidence that will lead to the detection of smuggling is entitled to receive 25 per cent of the sum collected by the government.

Let us see how the spy works. An American goes into an expensive jewelry shop on the Rue de la Paix (which caters, incidentally, exclusively to the newly rich). He conceives the idea that it would be a smart thing to buy an expensive mounted pin and bring it in duty free. The wily and oily Paris clerk, knowing full well the aforesaid provision of the American law (in confidence, "entre nous," suggests to the willing American how easy it is to bring this piece of jewelry into the United States free of duty. He tells him to put it into a gun, if he has one, or to stick it into a piece of soap. The buyer is thrilled at the experience he is going to enjoy and gratefully gives the clerk a couple of hundred francs. When he arrives in New York he is thoroughly searched.

The customs authorities have been tipped off by the clerk. The inspector seeks out the piece of soap or the gun. The American is horrified, but pays the extreme penalty. The clerk reaps his rewards.

How To Achieve Beauty

By MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN

The hand that is well-groomed is the hand that rules the world today. Gone is the time when great executives could overlook such comparatively unimportant matters as a manicure, for example, among other small amenities of good grooming. Unpolished finger nails disappeared with the fashion for "rough diamonds" and other unpolished people.

Today's successful men and women are distinguished by good breeding and good grooming—they are ladies and gentlemen, literally, to their fingertips.

Good grooming is not a matter of luxurious care and wealth. Everyone, excepting those who work constantly at hard, manual labor, may easily have well-groomed hands.

Even the active sportsman's hands are not neglected today. Brown, tanned, athletic hands can be supple, smooth and nicely manicured, as well as the dainty, lily-white ones that stay indoors and "saw a fine seam."

It's easy to take the necessary care of your hands. Only a few minutes daily, morning or night, with a few simple materials, will accomplish surprisingly satisfactory results.

When the finger tips or nails are stained, sponge them with peroxide or fresh lemon juice. Keep a soft but vigorous hand and nail brush, with the bland soap you use in your bath, and brush your nails whenever you wash your hands, then push back the cuticle with your towel. Once or twice a week, file the nails and apply a little cuticle liquid or cream to the skin around the base, then apply your polish. An application of good liquid polish will last a whole week, usually, before it must be removed and fresh polish applied.

Conservative women sometimes prefer to use a paste or powder and buff the nails till they shine. This leaves a smooth, gleaming surface, not brilliant, but enduring. Yet liquid polish is fast supplanting this dry powder or paste form since it saves time—a most valuable commodity in this busy modern day. Besides, it is more protective to the nails.

To be fashionable and proper, your hands should look the new or mode in faces. Clear-cut, fresh, well-groomed, immaculate — and natural looking—this is the vogue for smart hands and faces, both today.

Behind the Scenes In Washington

By CHARLES P. STEWART

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—While Sen. Charles S. Deneen, of Illinois, has been kept here all summer, helping frame the tariff bill, Washington hears that Congresswoman-at-Large Ruth Hanna McCormick, also of the Sucker state, has been working overtime, back among the hove folk, trying to guarantee Mr. Deneen's involuntary retirement when he comes up for renomination next spring—not that she has anything against Mr. Deneen for himself alone, but that she wants to run for the senate in place of him.

Washington may not be entitled to claim to know much about Illinois politics, but it has a perfectly good right to be especially interested in this particular fight.

If Mrs. McCormick wins at the primaries, in the spring, and again at the polls, in November, she will be the first regularly elected woman senator in American history. Mrs. Rebecca Felton did serve a few hours, by gubernatorial appointment, a number of years ago, but it was a purely technical, honorary term, of no significance whatever for practical political purposes.

A mere courtesy senatorship, like Mrs. Felton's, will not be satisfactory to Congresswoman McCormick. She desires the customarily full six years, at least—characterized by the usual committee activities, frequent participation in ballots, plenty of speeches, and all the patronage and other privileges that go with any complete, unqualified senatorship.

As a chivalrous politician, Senator Deneen is understood to sympathize, in principle, with the women voters' ambition to have one of their own number in the upper house of congress—but to object to it from his state, just at a time when he had planned to run for reelection.

Ordinarily the feeling among old political campaigners in Washington is that a woman aspirant for an important office does not stand much chance against a man who also has his heart set on it, for the simple reason that the man generally has had a great deal more experience.

In the present instance the betting is about even.

The best judges' impression of Mrs. McCormick is that no one knows politics any better than she does.

As Mark Hanna's daughter she ought to.

As wife of the late Sen. Medill McCormick she had every opportunity to develop whatever flair she inherited.

Money is not supposed to count in political campaigns, but it does help in getting acquainted throughout a big state, like Illinois—and good right to be especially interested in this particular fight.

If Mrs. McCormick wins at the primaries, in the spring, and again at the polls, in November, she will be the first regularly elected woman senator in American history. Mrs. Rebecca Felton did serve a few hours, by gubernatorial appointment, a number of years ago, but it was a purely technical, honorary term, of no significance whatever for practical political purposes.

Senator Deneen is an astute individual, too.

Years ago, when I used to know him in Chicago, he had a great reputation as a reformer. He was Cook county prosecutor then, and always and everlastingly he was engaged in a crusade of some sort—"cleaning up" some obnoxious element.

It is fatal, however, for a reformer to get things completely "cleaned up," because then he is no longer needed in office, to continue it.

Charles S. Deneen never made that mistake.

Expressions like "hard boiled" do not sound very well, but there is nothing objectionable about "practical."

Senator Deneen and Congresswoman McCormick alike are practical.

Washington looks to see them put on one of the finest scraps in many a long day for that Illinois senatorship—and no one will need to feel sorry for either of them, however it comes out.

Laws are like cobwebs which may catch small flies, but let wasps and hornets break through.—Swift

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

By MRS. MARY MORTON

MENU HINT

Tomato Bouillon, cold or hot.
Cabbage and Fish Salad.
Creamed Potatoes. Corn on the Cob.
Fruit Salad. Coffee.
Is this a luncheon or a dinner menu, do you think? Either, is the answer. A fish salad takes the place of meat or fish course. Potato chips might be substituted for the creamed potatoes. The fruit salad is the dessert.

Today's Recipes

Cabbage and Fish Salad—Have ready one cup shredded white cabbage. Sprinkle with well-seasoned French dressing. Add two and one-half cups of flaked delicate fish seasoned with mayonnaise or cooked dressing. Arrange on a bed of crisp lettuce or cress, garnish with small, stuffed tomatoes and serve immediately.

Delicious Fruit Salad—Dissolve two packages quick lemon gelatin and two packages quick orange gelatin in three cups boiling water. Add one can of dried pears and the juice from the pears, two cans of diced pineapple and the juice of one mixed fruit salad. The juice of two oranges and the juice of one-quarter grapefruit. Pour in small individual molds and chill. Turn out on crisp lettuce and serve with chintilly mayonnaise. This will serve ten.

Suggestions

The washing of clothing in which there is rubber elastic is a matter which the home laundress is not apt to understand. Special treatment should be given such articles, if their quality is to be preserved.

In preparing garments for laundering, separate those in which there is any elastic. Particularly should garments in which there is elastic webbing be set apart from the rest of the wash.

Boiling water which is efficient in the laundering of most underthings is highly detrimental to those which contain rubber elastic—or indeed, rubber of any kind. Water, warm but not so hot the hand cannot bear when plunged into it, is the best to use. A mild soap should be employed, and strong washing solutions or powders be avoided.

A plunger can be used to advantage upon cloth goods containing rubber. It should be worked up and down very gently. The suction will loosen the dirt and be less injurious to the garment than violent scrubbing on a wash board. After the plunger has been active, the rubber process can complete the work.

Take care not to break the rubberized portion of a garment by putting clothes pins into it. The wooden clamps are the best to use in suspending the article for drying.

Of the several precautions suggested, the one most important is the avoidance of boiling water. Carelessness in other matters may not result in serious injury to the elastic portion of a garment, but use of boiling water will rob it of the original elasticity.

Anyone doing home nursing, where there are rubber sheets to be cleaned or other accessories of the sick room which are made of rubber will find that boiling water has a disintegrating effect and should be avoided.

Diet and Health

By LULU HUNT PETERS, M. D.
Author of "Diet and Health" and "Diet for Children"

"Non-Fattening" Foods
"Dear Doctor: I have a book on reducing which says that ices, such as orange, pineapple and peach, also sherbets, are not fattening. I was also told that instead of candy a few marshmallows would not be fattening as they are made of gelatin. I would like to know if these two statements are correct. "Y."

When the statement is made that a certain food is not fattening, it should be used comparatively—it is not so fattening as some other food. For any food is fattening if it happens to be in excess of the needs, Y. Of course, some are much more fattening than others because they are more concentrated, therefore higher in calories.

Sherbets and water ices count about 100 calories to the scant half-cup (it is the sugar and fruit juices and egg whites, if used, that count), while one-quarter cup of ice cream is 100 calories. So sherbets and water ices are one-half as fattening as ice cream.

Marshmallows also have sugar in them. I think the commercial marshmallows are made with a base of gum arabic, not gelatin. Three average sized marshmallows are 100 calories. So one would be approximately 33 calories. Here again, comparing a marshmallow with the same sized piece of chocolate, the marshmallow is not nearly so fattening as the chocolate, for the piece of chocolate would be about 75 to 100 C.

The dry, granulated gelatin registers 100 C. to three scant tablespoons (a scant ounce), but that amount will stiffen one pint of water, so in a single serving of gelatin pudding you would get but a little of the gelatin. The sugar and other substances used make up its caloric value.

Sherbets, ice and gelatin puddings and cooked and fresh fruits are good desserts for the overweighters, for they are not so fattening as many other types.

You should have a good textbook on dietetics. We have such a list included in our article on Balanced Diet.

"I have some symptoms of diabetes and have been using saccharin for perhaps five years in my coffee and cereals, about three grains per day. Is the constant use of it in that quantity objectionable?"

Most diabetic specialists allow a small amount of saccharin, up to two grains a day. Saccharin is a coal tar product and if taken over too long a period of time, even in small doses, might be harmful, so it might be advisable for you to eliminate its use for a week at a time, every once in a while.

If you have diabetes, you should be under the care of a physician, R. If you are interested, we have a list of books on the subject written for the layman by authorities.

R.—Any chronic cough should be investigated. In some cases it may be an irritation of the bronchial tubes, which is due to sensitization of certain foods or pollens, etc., or it may be due to an infection; in some cases it is a reflex from irritation elsewhere in the body, such as in the ears, etc. You remember my writing the case of a man whose chronic cough of many years standing was cured when a grain of rice which had been lodged in his ear for many years, was removed? In some cases, X-Rays have disclosed some foreign body that has been swallowed the wrong way and gotten down into the lungs. Have a check up by a competent physician, R.

Living and Loving

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

How long should an engagement last? Some say long engagements are usually broken, but it would seem as if when two people have found one another and truly love, they could be true for a year or two, especially as both are working for the same purpose—to establish a home together.
One can't generalize about such things.

I have known young couples to meet and become engaged, to finish their schooling and work for two or three years until they were established, and then marry. And, I have observed, those marriages are usually happy ones.

And I have also known cases where marriage was not possible for some time and the young people drifted apart. The question is, if they had married, would they have stuck?

A troubled girl writes me as follows:

"DEAR VIRGINIA LEE: I am very much interested in your column and read it every night. I am engaged to a young man whom I love dearly. He hasn't a good position now, but a friend is interceding for a better one for him. He thinks if he gets the new position our plans would of this and I told him that I thought the new position would be wonderful. Did I do right?"

"I have a girl friend who has just recently married and lives very happily in her new home, although she went with her husband three years prior to marriage. When she found out that my engagement was going to last two years she disgusted me by telling me that I would tire of him if I waited that long; that I should get married sooner if I wanted to love him."

"Virginia, I would wait all my life for this boy. That's how much I think of him. Persons who get married today cannot live on love. Do you think it advisable to wait that long? He is very affectionate towards me, and his parents think quite a lot of me and mine of him."

"I am waiting anxiously for your answer. He says he could wait all his life for me, so I think everything will turn out all right, don't you, Mrs. Lee?"

JIMMY.

There is no earthly reason why everything should not turn out all right, Jimmie dear. You have plenty of time, you love one another.

Peter's Adventures

By MRS. FLORENCE SMITH VINCENT

MR. AND MRS. WALKING STICK

Peter looked down at the ground. Sure enough the fireless little "twig" was telling the truth. There, almost under his shoe, was a second little "twig" thrashing about, apparently trying to rise to its feet. If Peter had seen it before at all he had thought it was a real twig. However, it was no time to argue, so he bent over and helped the nearly crushed little creature to stand upon its six legs, all of which had been waving in the air as it tried to get up. His wife lovingly laid one arm over the poor fellow's thin shoulders and there they stood, the two of them, waiting for Peter to say something. As soon as he found his voice Peter apologized.

"I am very sorry, indeed, to have hurt you, so, sir, but as sure as I am born, I had no idea at all there was anyone near me, much less at my very feet. Will you forgive me and let me do something to help you?" If you are injured I can bind up your wound. Perhaps, if I have stamped the breath out of you, you will let me carry you to your home."

"Well, certainly you did crush me—that is, nearly," replied the suffering little "twig," in a weak voice, "but, of course, if you didn't see me it wasn't your fault. An accident's an accident, and can't be helped. It's only one more misfortune that comes of looking like a twig. I will rest all right directly. I must rest for a few moments, though. Wife, help find me a soft spot, will you?"

If Peter had not watched them move off, when they stopped, he could not have told which were make-believe "twigs" and which the twigs they clung to. As soon as the wife had taken her place she called to Peter, quite as if he had just been discussing the matter.

"And why, pray, shouldn't we look like twigs when we are twigs of a sort—twigs of the animal kingdom. It is high time we introduced ourselves—Mr. and Mrs. Walking Stick, if you please."

The account is still alive, having grown with the accumulation of $2,758.86 in interest to $2,773.95.

WHAT ABOUT THESE?
In the terrific trade which accompanied his renunciation of America and all its hypocrisies, Frank Ward O'Malley, writer, said: "The United States has never produced a painter, poet, novelist, sculptor, essayist, orator, musician, playwright, historian, scientist or philosopher of the first class."

And immediately Ben De Casseres, O'Malley's old drinking partner in the days of "Jacks", arises to confer upon Frank the title of "Ignoramus."

"While I endorse, in the main, his trade against America," says Benjamin who has yet to take himself or anybody else very seriously, "there is just one spot where he puts his foot in it and reveals his own morosity and unfairness, which are the very charges he brings against this country."

Benjamin then proceeds to list Arthur B. Davies, painter; Nathaniel Hawthorne, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry David Thoreau, Webster, Ingersoll, Bryan, Victor Herbert, Eugene O'Neill, Poe, Whitman, Robinson Jeffers, William James, James Branch Cabell, "Hell" Mencken, and last, but not least, Benjamin De Casseres.

That ought to hold Mr. Frank Ward O'Malley, The Sassy Swiss, for awhile!

GOOD STUFF, ANYWAY

There was an interview the other day with "Ethel, the Barrymores," in which she was quoted as saying:

"A psychic force has visited me recently and I am afraid of it. I have noticed the difference in the last few months. I have been able to hold them tighter than ever. Something in here"—indicating her heart—"makes me do it."

After reading that twice I addressed a paragraph to Ethel telling her to cheer up that what she'd mistaken for a "psychic force" was nothing but a touch of plain old-fashioned liver.

And now Ethel comes along and denies she ever said it. Isn't that like a Barrymore!

THE FORD JOKE PASSES

Commenting on the passing of the Ford joke, a New York editorial writer says:

"It really is dead . . . It was here one day and gone the next. No hand was raised against it with intent to kill. It folded its wings and faded out of the national picture. It died when the new model Ford came in. The Ford joke was based on the fact that the little, ugly rattlebox which was as common as dirt, yet did inconceivable marvels of travel. When Mr. Ford actually allowed beauty of line and pretension of body to creep into his product, the old joke did not apply. . . . We never thought we would miss the Ford joke with its endless permutations and combinations, but we do. It was the universal industrial joke of an industrial nation. It was the counterpart of the age of mass production. We ought always to have some symbol like that, rolling down our grooves of national humor."

THE WAY of the WORLD

By GROVE PATTERSON

ALWAYS THE TARIFF

Few congresses have a touch delicate enough for tariff tinkering. The tariff ought to be handled as a good barber handles a face. Putting a jack under the present bill in one place and piling weights on it in another place just naturally results in getting business all out of order. Wonder what sort of impression a president and congress pledged not to touch the tariff would make on the people? It might make a popular platform.

DON'T FORGET THE RAILROADS

These days we talk volumes and write reams about the newer kinds of transportation—airplanes, autos, buses. We ought to take an hour off and remember that the original giants of transportation—the railroads—did more than any other single force to make this republic what it is today in its wide sweep of industry, business and prosperity. The railroad men of the past generation were empire builders beyond the Mississippi.

COLLEGES NOT CURE-ALLS

In the past thirty years college attendance increased six-fold. But the tide is changing. In the season of 1927-28 the increase was only two per cent over the year before. In 1928-29 the increase was hardly one per cent. The great increase of a few years ago was one of the striking results of a new and more widely distributed prosperity. The increasing fashion of today, however, is to question more and more closely just what education is and just how to get it. A chance at college is worth while and young men and women should be encouraged to take that chance and to work for the opportunity, but a college education is not a cure-all. It does not even provide a good mind.

RIISING THROUGH STORM

Death ended the stormy career of Victor Berger, Socialist. There are not many outstanding Socialists in the country today. Times are too good. Berger attracted admiration because he kept the faith with his principle. He had courage, character, personality. He wasn't just a book Socialist. He ran for office and was elected. He gave one the impression of knowing what he wanted. He had the tremendous advantage of a daily newspaper, established nearly 30 years ago, which gave him expression. Men, even though in the minority, can rise to heights when they are sincere, courageous, persistent.

REDUCTION OF DUTY ON PRECIOUS STONES URGED

By EMANUEL CELLER

Congressman from New York

(Emanuel Celler was born at Brooklyn, N. Y., May 6, 1888. He is a graduate of Columbia university. He has practiced law in New York city since 1912. He organized a retail meat industry in Brooklyn, the Madison State Bank of New York city, and the Reliance Investment company of Brooklyn. Elected to congress in 1923 from the tenth New York district, he has been returned each term since. He is a Democrat.)

I have recently advocated reduction of the tariff on diamonds and other precious stones, cut but not set, from 20 to 10 per cent and free admission of rough or uncut stones in their natural state.

There seems to be a widespread idea developing among tourists that it is no disgrace to smuggle; in fact, it is considered "smart." One smuggles liquor—why not diamonds? Often we read of ladies of so-called quality who are caught smuggling diamonds. They do it gaily and nonchalantly.

It is difficult to determine the exact cost to the government in its unsuccessful attempts to prevent smuggling. The cost, undoubtedly, is very great. Much of this cost would be eliminated if the rate was reduced.

But there is another evil that would be eliminated with the reduction. We maintain, in Europe, a mild system of espionage. We have spies in some of the European capitals. They are really stool pigeons or Paul Prys. They are found in places like the Rue de la Paix in Paris. The internal revenue laws provide that anyone disclosing evidence that will lead to the detection of smuggling is entitled to receive 25 per cent of the sum collected by the government.

Let us see how the spy works. An American goes into an expensive jewelry shop on the Rue de la Paix (which caters, incidentally, exclusively to the newly rich). He conceives the idea that it would be a smart thing to buy an expensive mounted pin and bring it in duty free. The wily, oily Paris clerk, knowing full well the aforesaid provision of the American law (in confidence), "entre nous" suggests to the willing American how easy it is to bring this piece of jewelry into the United States free of duty. He tells him to put it into a gun, if he has one, or to stick it into a piece of soap. The buyer is thrilled at the experience he is going to enjoy and gratefully gives the clerk a couple of hundred francs. When he arrives in New York he is thoroughly searched.

The customs authorities have been tipped off by the clerk. The inspector seeks out the piece of soap or the gun. The American is mortified, but pays the extreme penalty. The clerk reaps his rewards.

Behind the Scenes In Washington

By CHARLES P. STEWART

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—While Sen. Charles S. Deneen, of Illinois, has been kept here all summer, helping frame the tariff bill, Washington hears that Congresswoman-at-Large Ruth Hanna McCormick, also of the Sucker state, has been working overtime, back among the howls, trying to guarantee Mr. Deneen's involuntary retirement when he comes up for renomination next spring—not that she has anything against Mr. Deneen for himself alone, but that she wants to run for the senate in place of him.

Washington may not be entitled to claim to know much about Illinois politics, but it has a perfectly good right to be especially interested in this particular fight.

If Mrs. McCormick wins at the primaries, in the spring, and again at the polls, in November, she will be the first regularly elected woman senator in American history. Mrs. Rebecca Felton did serve a few hours, by gubernatorial appointment, a number of years ago, but it was a purely technical, honorary term, of no significance whatever for practical political purposes.

A mere courtesy senatorship, like Mrs. Felton's, will not be satisfactory to Congresswoman McCormick. She desires the customarily full six years, at least—characterized by the usual committee activities, frequent participation in ballots, plenty of speeches, and all the patronage and other privileges that go with any complete, unqualified senatorship.

As a chivalrous politician, Senator Deneen is understood to sympathize, in principle, with the women voters' ambition to have one of their own number in the upper house of congress—but to object to it from his state, just at a time when he had planned to run for reelection.

Ordinarily the feeling among old political campaigners in Washington is that a woman aspirant for an important office does not stand much chance against a man who also has his heart set on it, for the simple reason that the man generally has had a great deal more experience.

In the present instance the bet-

ANOTHER BIG BERTHA

How To Achieve Beauty

By MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN

The hand that is well-groomed is the hand that rules the world today. Gone is the time when great executives could overlook such comparatively unimportant matters as a manicure, for example, among other small amenities of good grooming. Unpolished finger nails disappeared with the fashion for "rough diamonds" and other unpolished people.

Today's successful men and women are distinguished by good breeding and good grooming—they are ladies and gentlemen, literally, to their fingertips.

Good grooming is not a matter of luxurious care and wealth. Everyone, excepting those who work constantly at hard, manual labor, may easily have well-groomed hands.

Even the active sportsman's hands are not neglected today. Brown, tanned, athletic hands can be supple, smooth and nicely manicured, as well as the dainty, lily-white ones that stay indoors and "saw a fine seam."

It's easy to take the necessary care of your hands. Only a few minutes daily, morning or night, with a few simple materials, will accomplish surprisingly satisfactory results.

When the finger tips or nails are stained, sponge them with peroxide or fresh lemon juice. Keep a soft but vigorous hand and nail brush, with the bland soap you use in your bath, and brush your nails whenever you wash your hands, then push back the cuticle with your towel. Once or twice a week, file the nails and apply a little cuticle liquid or cream to the skin around the base, then apply your polish. An application of good liquid polish will last a whole week, usually, before it must be removed and fresh polish applied.

Conservative women sometimes prefer to use a paste or powder and buff the nails till they shine. This leaves a smooth, gleaming surface, not brilliant, but enduring. Yet liquid polish is fast supplanting this dry powder or paste form since it saves time—a most valuable commodity in this busy modern day. Besides, it is more protective to the nails.

To be fashionable and proper, your hands should match the newer mode in faces. Clear-cut, fresh, well-groomed, immaculate—and a natural looking—this is the vogue for smart hands and faces, both, today.

ling is about even.

The best judges' impression of Mrs. McCormick is that no one knows politics any better than she does.

As Mark Hanna's daughter she ought to.

As wife of the late Sen. Medill McCormick she had every opportunity to develop whatever flair she inherited.

Money is not supposed to count in political campaigns, but it does help in getting acquainted throughout a big state, like Illinois—and Mrs. McCormick has barrels of it—her own; a goodly chunk of the Chicago Tribune Medill's and of the agricultural machinery McCormicks' through her husband.

And she is an exceedingly smart woman on her own account.

Senator Deneen is an astute individual, too. Years ago, when I used to know him in Chicago, he had a great reputation as a reformer. He was Cook county prosecutor then, and always and everlastingly he was engaged in a crusade of some sort—"cleaning up" some obnoxious element.

It is fatal, however, for a reformer to get things completely "cleaned up," because then he is no longer needed in office, to continue it. Chadwick S. Deneen never made that mistake.

Expressions like "hard boiled" do not sound very well, but there is nothing objectionable about "practical."

Senator Deneen and Congresswoman McCormick alike are practical.

Washington looks to see them put on one of the finest scraps in many a long day for that Illinois senatorship—and no one will need to feel sorry for either one of them, however it comes out.

Laws are like cobwebs which may catch small flies, but let wasps and hornets break through.

MENU HINT

Tomato Bouillon, cold or hot
Cabbage and Fish Salad
Creamed Potatoes, Corn on the Cob
Fruit Salad, Coffee
Is this a luncheon or a dinner menu, do you think? Either, is the answer. A fish salad takes the place of meat or fish course. Potato chips might be substituted for the creamed potatoes. The fruit salad is the dessert.

Today's Recipes

Cabbage and Fish Salad—Have ready one cup shredded white cabbage. Sprinkle with well-seasoned French dressing. Add two and one-half cups of flaked delicate fish seasoned with mayonnaise or cooked dressing. Arrange on a bed of crisp lettuce or cress, garnish with small, stuffed tomatoes and serve immediately.

Delicious Fruit Salad—Dissolve two packages quick lemon gelatin and two packages quick orange gelatin in three cups boiling water. Add one can of dried pears and the juice from the pears, two cans of diced pineapple and the juice, one can of minced fruit salad, the juice of two oranges and the juice of one-quarter grapefruit. Pour into small individual molds and chill. Turn out on crisp lettuce and serve with chintilly mayonnaise. This will serve ten.

Suggestions

The washing of clothing in which there is rubber elastic is a matter which the home laundress is not apt to understand. Special treatment should be given such articles, if their quality is to be preserved.

In preparing garments for laundering, separate those in which there is any elastic. Particularly should garments in which there is elastic webbing be set apart from the rest of the wash.

Boiling water which is efficient in the laundering of most underthings is highly detrimental to those which contain rubber elastic—or indeed, rubber of any kind. Water, warm but not so hot that hand cannot bear when plunged into it, is the best to use. A mild soap should be employed, and strong washing solutions or powders be avoided.

A plunger can be used to advantage upon cloth goods containing rubber. It should be worked up and down very gently. The suction will loosen the dirt and be less injurious to the garment than violent scrubbing on a wash board. After the plunger has been active, the rubber process can complete the work.

Take care not to break the rubberized portion of a garment by putting clothes pins into it. The wooden clamps are the best to use in suspending the article for drying.

Of the several precautions suggested, the one most important is the avoidance of boiling water. Carelessness in other matters may not result in serious injury to the elastic portion of a garment, but use of boiling water will rob it of the original elasticity.

Anyone doing home nursing, where there are rubber sheets to be cleaned or other accessories of the sick room which aer made of rubber will find that boiling water has a disintegrating effect and should be avoided.

Diet and Health

By LULU HUNT PETERS, M. D.

Author of "Diet and Health" and "Diet for Children"

"Non-Fattening" Foods

"Dear Doctor: I have a book on reducing which says that ices, such as orange, pineapple and peach, also sherbets, are not fattening. I was also told that instead of candy a few marshmallows would not be fattening as they are made of gelatin. I would like to know if these two statements are correct. "Y."

When the statement is made that a certain food is not fattening, it should be used comparatively—it is not so fattening as some other food. For any food is fattening if it happens to be in excess of the needs, Y. Of course, some are much more fattening than others because they are more concentrated, therefore higher in calories.

Sherbets and water ices count about 100 calories to the scant half-cup (it is the sugar and fruit juices and egg whites, if used, that count), while one-quarter cup of ice cream is 100 calories. So sherbets and water ices are one-half as fattening as ice cream.

Marshmallows also have sugar in them. I think the commercial marshmallows are made with a base of gum arabic, not gelatin. Three average sized marshmallows are 100 calories. So one would be approximately 33 calories. Here again, comparing a marshmallow with the same sized piece of chocolate, the marshmallow is not nearly so fattening as the chocolate, for the piece of chocolate would be about 75 to 100 C.

The dry, granulated gelatin registers 100 C. to three scant tablespoons (a scant ounce), but that amount will stiffen one pint of water, so in a single serving of gelatin pudding you would get but a little of the gelatin. The sugar and other substances used make up its caloric value.

Sherbets, ice and gelatin puddings and cooked and fresh fruits are good desserts for the over-weighters, for they are not so fattening as many other types. You should have a good textbook on dietetics. We have such a list included in our article on Balanced Diet.

"I have some symptoms of diabetes and have been using saccharin for perhaps five years in my coffee and cereals, about three grains per day. Is the constant use of it in that quantity objectionable?" R.

Most diabetic specialists allow a small amount of saccharin, up to two grains a day. Saccharin is a coal tar product and if taken over too long a period of time, even in small doses, might be harmful, so it might be advisable for you to eliminate its use for a week at a time, every once in a while.

If you have diabetes, you should be under the care of a physician. R. If you are interested, we have a list of books on the subject written for the layman by authorities.

R.—Any chronic cough should be investigated. In some cases it may be an irritation of the bronchial tubes, which is due to sensitization of certain foods or pollens, etc., or it may be due to an infection; in some cases it is a reflex from irritation elsewhere in the body, such as in the ears, etc. You remember my writing the case of a man whose chronic cough of many years' standing was cured when a grain of rice which had been lodged in his ear for many years, was removed? In some cases, X-Rays have disclosed some foreign body that has been swallowed the wrong way and gotten down into the lungs. Have a check up by a competent physician, R.

Living and Loving

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

How long should an engagement last? Some say long engagements are usually broken, but it would seem as if when two people have found one another and truly love, they could be true for a year, or two, especially as both are working for the same purpose—to establish a home together.

One can't generalize about such things. I have known young couples to meet and become engaged, to finish their schooling and work for two or three years until they were established, and then marry. And I have observed, those marriages are usually happy ones.

And I have also known cases where marriage was not possible for some time and the young people drifted apart. The question is, if they had married, would they have stuck?

A troubled girl writes me as follows:

"DEAR VIRGINIA LEE: I am very much interested in your column and read it every night. I am engaged to a young man whom I love dearly. He hasn't a good position now, but a friend is interceding for a better one for him. He thinks if he gets the new position, our plans would come true. He asked my opinion of this and I told him that I thought the new position would be wonderful. Did I do right?"

"I have a girl friend who has just recently married and lives very happily in her new home, although she went with her husband three years prior to marriage. When she found out that my engagement was going to last two years she was disgusted. By asking me that I would tire of him if I waited that long; that I should get married sooner if I wanted to love him."

"Virginia, I would wait all my life for this boy. That's how much I think of him. Persons who get married today cannot live on love. Do you think it advisable to wait that long? He is very affectionate towards me, and his parents think quite a lot of me and mine of him."

"I am waiting anxiously for your answer. He says he could wait all his life for me, so I think everything will turn out all right, don't you, Mrs. Lee?" JIMMY.

There is no earthly reason why everything should not turn out all right, Jimmy dear. You have plenty of time, you love one another and have a great object in view in working for your home. The two years will pass quickly and you will be all the happier, I think, for being so sensible and realizing that you must have something besides love on which to live. My best wishes to you and the boy friend.

JANE: My dear, your letter was certainly a puzzler. I had to read it a number of times to get it straight. Was afraid I'd have an alphabetical nightmare if I went to sleep before I answered it.

Young girl's friendships, like those between boys and girls, are not always stable. They fluctuate, depending on the interests of the moment. It seems to me this group of girls are taking their affairs too seriously. Why can't they all be good friends and alternate in "going with" one another? If H. can't make up her mind which one she likes best, let her see as much of both as possible, and also, if possible, together, and compare them.

If you are all going to college this fall that will surely know the couples, and they will surely know whom they like best if they room together at school.

They will get to know one another as they never did at home.

"DEAR VIRGINIA LEE: I need a few words of advice. I am 20 years of age and in love with a boy the same age. He says he loves me madly. I have been married the second time. I am staying with a man and his wife. They won't allow me to see this boy. They caused us to have arguments. He married another girl. They are separated. He said he did it for spite. This boy still wants me. Do you think I should fight for the one I love or try to forget him?"

"LONGING FOR LOVE." So you need a "few words of advice." Do you? It seems to me you need whole volumes on the responsibility of marriage. A man who marries for spite is not the kind to make a good husband. Are you divorced from your husbands, by the way? The people you live with have no right to say whom you shall have for friends. Get free from all entanglements, wait until you meet a good man, and then marry for keeps. You will be much happier and a much more desirable citizen.

Peter's Adventures

By MRS. FLORENCE SMITH VINCENT

MR. AND MRS. WALKING STICK

Peter looked down at the ground. Sure enough the fireless little "twig" was telling the truth. There, almost under his shoe, was a second little "twig" thrashing about, apparently trying to rise to its feet. If Peter had seen it before at all he had thought it was a real twig. However, it was no time to argue, so he bent over and helped the nearly crushed little creature to stand upon its six legs, all of which had been waving in the air as it tried to get up. His wife lovingly laid one arm over the poor fellow's thin shoulders and there they stood, the two of them, waiting for Peter to say something. As soon as he found his voice Peter apologized. "I am very sorry, indeed, to have hurt you so, sir, but as sure as I am born, I had no idea at all there was anyone near me, much less at my very feet. Will you forgive me and let me do something to help you? If you are injured I can bind up your wound. Perhaps, if I have stamped the breath out of you, you will let me carry you to your home."

"Well, certainly you did crush me—that is, nearly," replied the suffering little "twig," in a weak voice, "but, of course, if you didn't see me it wasn't your fault. An accident's an accident, and can't be helped. It's only one more misfortune that comes along with a twig. I will feel all right directly. I must rest for a few moments, though. Wife, help find me a soft spot, will you?"

If Peter had not watched them move off, when they stopped, he could not have told which were make-believe "twigs" and which the twigs they clung to. As soon

Pinch-Hitting For Frame

A Xenian who was interested in finding a copy of the rules of the grand old game of croquet, told this department that he was unable to find a copy in Xenia.

Back in the gay nineties, croquet reached the peak of its popularity. Then it was fashionable to play croquet and it provided an amusement company in those days there were few outdoor sports in which both men and women could participate, and there was a warm welcome for croquet.

But that was before the days when women entered with zest into the strenuous pastimes as tennis, golf, swimming or croquet. Through all of these modern phases of the sporting world, however, croquet still retains its allure. The lawn game is still played in Xenia, and in some places, remarkably at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fleming Watt, W. Second St., the lawn courts have been lighted at night to permit playing after dark.

The return of Harold "Red" Grange, former "Gridiron Ghost" from the University of Illinois, to the movies, isn't going to take place as soon as expected. Universal has decided that "The Varsity Show," the picture selected for Grange, is not the proper vehicle for his auburn beauty, and has postponed the Grange picture until a proper story is discovered. "Red" is in Hollywood now, but will have to wait while somebody else makes "The Varsity Show." This is the young man who appeared so disgusted with the movies following his initial appearance in the pictures, shortly after he flashed across American collegiate gridirons as the greatest football star of modern times. They all fall.

Indications are that Cedarville College football team will play Wilmington College's schedule this year, while the Quakers are pursuing a schedule that might fit better with the Cedarville team.

For some unknown reason, Coach "Shifty" Bolen has booked but five games for his grid team this fall, two of them being with Cedarville. Bolen usually has a plenty fast, tough football team at Wilmington, and mid-season frequently finds him looking around for more worlds to conquer. That he should be content with a short, weak schedule this year, passes all understanding.

On the other hand Coach Marvin Bost of Cedarville usually has such a short amount of grid material, that the tough schedule his team takes on this year, seems little short of phenomenal. Cedarville opens with Transylvania and plays Cincinnati, Kentucky, West-levan, Wilmington, Delaware and other strong teams during a ten-game season.

The Cedarville games with Transylvania and University of Cincinnati, will be played at night, an apparently growing custom.

When Boyd Chambers was director of athletics at Cincinnati he inaugurated night football there for two reasons. One was to eliminate the bucking of popularity of horse races at Latonia during the early part of the season and the other was to get away from the hot afternoons.

Anyway, football patronage had never been very enthusiastic and it was hoped the night games might spur interest. The custom has been followed there since and is now being inaugurated in several other places including the University of Detroit.

RESERVES WILL USE MAXTON HERE TWICE IN WEEK END GAME

Ankeney To Pitch Against All-Star Softball Team

Manager Jess Chambliss of the Xenia Reserves will call on his star hurler, Maxton, to pitch two games in two days as a result of the three games the Reserves will play Sunday and Monday.

Maxton will pitch for the Washington St. team against the American Railway Express Co. team of Dayton, Sunday afternoon and then will pitch the first game of the Labor Day double-header against the College St. team of the Dayton Church League.

Ankeney, a youthful hurler who has pitched two shut-out victories for the Reserves this season, will work against the all-star team picked from the National and American Softball Leagues in the nightcap of the holiday program.

The game with the Express team Sunday will be the third and deciding contest in a three-game series. The Reserves evened the count last Sunday by knocking "Jess" Haines from the box and taking the second game of the series behind superb pitching by Maxton. Haines is a cousin of Jess Haines, the Phillipsburg pitcher with the St. Louis Cardinals, and is rated as nobody's ice. However, on account of the pelt he took at the hands of the Reserves last Sunday, Manager Al Lane will send Don Jacobs against the Reserves in the deciding game. Jacobs formerly pitched for the Reserves.

Until the game last Sunday, the Reserves had held their opponents to but one run in the last forty-six innings. During that time only four opponents have reached third base. The one run was scored by the Posttown Indians. As a result of the strength shown by the Reserves, Manager Chambliss has had difficulty in booking teams strong enough to give real opposition this season.

Frank Cain, Gene Leahy and "Red" Randall, who will probably play the all-star football team Monday, have all played with the Reserves in the past. Cain was probably the best fielding first baseman ever to play here until an operation put him out of the game. With Dick Wells pitching for the softball club, the Reserves are expecting some real opposition Monday.

Pinch-Hitting For Frame

A Xenian who was interested in finding a copy of the rules of the grand old game of croquet, told this department that he was unable to find a copy in Xenia.

Back in the gay nineties, croquet reached the peak of its popularity. Then it was fashionable to play croquet and it provided an amusing outdoor pastime for mixed company. In those days there were few outdoor sports in which both men and women could participate, and there was a warm welcome for croquet.

But that was before the days when women entered with zest in the strenuous pastimes as tennis, golf, swimming or croquet. Through all of these modern phases of the sporting world, however, croquet still retains its allure. The lawn game is still played in Xenia, and in some places, remarkably at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fleming Watt, W. Second St., the lawn courts have been lighted up at night to permit playing after dark.

The return of Harold "Red" Grange, former "Gridiron Ghost" from the University of Illinois, to the movies, isn't going to take place as soon as expected. Universal has decided that "The Varsity Show," the picture selected for his return, is not the proper vehicle for his return. Grange, who has been postponed the picture until a proper story is discovered, "Red" is in Hollywood now, but will have to wait while somebody else makes "The Varsity Show." This is the young man who appeared so disgraced with the movies following his initial appearance in the pictures, shortly after he flashed across American collegiate grids as the greatest football star of modern times. They all fall.

Indications are that Cedarville College football team will play Wilmington College's schedule this year, while the Quakers are pursuing a schedule that might fit better with the Cedarville team.

For some unknown reason, Coach "Shifty" Bolen has booked five games for his grid team this fall, two of them being with Cedarville. Bolen usually has a plenty fast, tough football team at Wilmington, and mid-season frequently finds him looking around for more worlds to conquer. That he should be content with a short, weak schedule this year, passes all understanding.

On the other hand Coach Marvin Bost of Cedarville usually has such a short amount of grid material, that the tough schedule his team takes on this year, seems little short of phenomenal. Cedarville opens with Transylvania and plays Cincinnati, Kentucky, West Virginia, and other teams during a ten-game season.

The Cedarville games with Transylvania and University of Cincinnati, will be played at night, an apparently growing custom.

When Boyd Chambers was director of athletics at Cincinnati he suggested night football there for two reasons. One was to eliminate the bucking of the popularity of horse races at Latonia during the early part of the season and the other was to get away from the hot afternoons.

Anyway, football patronage had never been very enthusiastic and it was hoped the night games might spur interest. The custom has been followed there since and is now being inaugurated in several other places including the University of Detroit.

"NEW KONJOLA RESTORED ME TO HEALTH!"

Victim of Stomach and Other Troubles Says New Compound Gave Him His Only Relief

"Konjola ended my suffering, and I am truly grateful," said Mr. Michael J. Andrews, 3001 Poe Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. "For eight years I suffered from stomach trouble and other ills. My stomach hurt me all the time, and I often coughed up bits of partly digested food. Backache was another source of misery and I had to get up frequently at night on account of bladder actions. "But after all the other medicines I tried failed, Konjola scored a fine victory. In a remarkably short time all my health troubles had disappeared. My appetite is excellent, my digestion perfect, and my kidneys restored to their normal, healthy condition. I am feeling better than I have for ten years. No wonder I am an enthusiastic Konjola booster!"

Konjola is sold in Xenia at the Gallagher Drug Store and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.

DOWNTOWNERS DEFEATED; LEAD IN BOTH LEAGUES IS KNOTTED

The Downtown Country Club entry and the Xenia Citizens are tied today for leadership in the National Softball League.

The Downtowners lost their league leadership Thursday night when the Lang Chevrolet defeated them 11 to 7 in a seven-inning game at Cox Memorial Athletic Field, dropping them back into a tie with the Citizens, after they had maintained a safe lead over a period of weeks.

The standing Friday for the first two teams read:

RESERVES WILL USE MAXTON HERE TWICE IN WEEK END GAME

Ankeney To Pitch
Against All-Star Softball Team

Manager Jess Chambliss of the Xenia Reserves will call on his star hurler, Maxton, to pitch two games in two days as a result of the three games the Reserves will play Sunday and Monday.

Maxton will pitch for the Washington St. team against the American Railway Express Co. team of Dayton, Sunday afternoon and then will pitch the first game of the Labor Day double-header against the College St. team of the Dayton Church League.

Ankeney, a youthful hurler who has pitched two shut-out victories for the Reserves this season, will work against the all-star team picked from the National and American Softball Leagues in the nightcap of the holiday program.

The game with the Express team Sunday will be the third and deciding contest in a three-game series. The Reserves evened the count last Sunday by knocking "Jesse" Haines from the box and taking the second game of the series behind superb pitching by Maxton. Haines is a cousin of Jess Haines, the Phillipsburg pitcher with the St. Louis Cardinals, and is rated as nobody's ice.

However, on account of the pelting he took at the hands of the Reserves last Sunday, Manager Al Lape will send Don Jacobs against the Reserves in the deciding game.

Until the game last Sunday, the Reserves had held their opponents to but one run in the last forty-six innings. During that time only four opponents have reached third base. The one run was scored by the Posttown Indians. As a result of the strength shown by the Reserves, Manager Chambliss has had difficulty in booking teams strong enough to give real opposition this season.

Frank Cain, Gene Leahy and "Red" Randall, who will probably play the all-star football team Monday, have all played with the Reserves in the past. Cain was probably the best fielding first baseman ever to play here until an operation put him out of the game. With Dick Wells pitching for the softball club, the Reserves are expecting some real opposition Monday.

On the other hand Coach Marvin Bost of Cedarville usually has such a short amount of grid material, that the tough schedule his team takes on this year, seems little short of phenomenal. Cedarville opens with Transylvania and plays Cincinnati, Kentucky, West Virginia, and other teams during a ten-game season.

The Cedarville games with Transylvania and University of Cincinnati, will be played at night, an apparently growing custom.

When Boyd Chambers was director of athletics at Cincinnati he suggested night football there for two reasons. One was to eliminate the bucking of the popularity of horse races at Latonia during the early part of the season and the other was to get away from the hot afternoons.

Anyway, football patronage had never been very enthusiastic and it was hoped the night games might spur interest. The custom has been followed there since and is now being inaugurated in several other places including the University of Detroit.

The Cedarville games with Transylvania and University of Cincinnati, will be played at night, an apparently growing custom.

When Boyd Chambers was director of athletics at Cincinnati he suggested night football there for two reasons. One was to eliminate the bucking of the popularity of horse races at Latonia during the early part of the season and the other was to get away from the hot afternoons.

Anyway, football patronage had never been very enthusiastic and it was hoped the night games might spur interest. The custom has been followed there since and is now being inaugurated in several other places including the University of Detroit.

The Downtowners, still shy four players because of vacations, also played Thursday night without the services of "Sam" Huston, hard-hitting first-baseman. They were unable to consistently solve the offerings of Mikes and Smittle, obtaining but seven hits. The Langs rolled up only eight hits off the delivery of "Hank" Eavey but they bunched his twice and took advantage of errors, to run up a commanding score.

The Langs drew first blood in the second when they scored once on an error and a hit. Two hits helped the Downtowners tie the score in the third, but in that inning the Langs had their first but-felting, scoring four times on three safeties. The Downtowners added another in the fifth and each team had a big sixth inning.

The Downtowners scored five runs in this stanza with the aid of two hits, an error, a fielder's choice and two walks but the Langs produced six runs on two hits, three errors and a walk. The Langs played with only eight players, being without the services of a left fielder.

The game Thursday night wound up the week's league battles and finds leadership in both leagues tied up. While the D. T. C. Club and the Xenia Reserves are tangled for first place in the National League the Dayton and Allison nine and the Postoffice team are in death grips for first place in the American League standing.

On the other hand Coach Marvin Bost of Cedarville usually has such a short amount of grid material, that the tough schedule his team takes on this year, seems little short of phenomenal. Cedarville opens with Transylvania and plays Cincinnati, Kentucky, West Virginia, and other teams during a ten-game season.

LABOR AND PRAYER

"Labor is of noble birth but prayer the daughter of heaven; Labor has a place near the throne but prayer sits at the feet of Jesus. Labor climbs the mountain peak with Moses, but prayer soars upward with Elijah in a chariot of fire. Labor has the raven's wing, yet sometimes goes forth in vain; prayer has the wings of a dove and never returns but with the olive leaf of blessing."—Grover.

Creamed Comments On S.S. Lesson

Nehemiah was a man of great ability and indomitable will and above all of piety and prayer, of inflexible faith and heroic faithfulness.

This lesson shows what one man of prayer and purpose, fire and fervor can do. He organized and energized his associates to do what they thought could not be done.

V. 1. "Hear, O our God; for we are despised; and turn back their reproach upon their own head; and give them up for a spoil in the land of captivity." This prayer is directed toward those who conspired to fight his organization of men engaged in the rebuilding of the wall of Jerusalem.

Jerusalem could be rebuilt only at the cost of a battle in which is suggested the cost of building the kingdom of God today.

V. 6. "So we built the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto half the height thereof; for the people had a mind to work." This work was co-operative accomplishment, each one encouraging the other by doing his best; all true work calls for true-heartedness.

V. 15. "And it came to pass when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, and God had brought their counsel to naught, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one to his work."

Though Nehemiah and his men did their best, all credit was given to God from whom all power is given.

V. 17. "They that builded the walls and they that bare burdens laded themselves; everyone with his own hands wrought in the work, and with the other held his weapon."

Here is a combination of prayer, work and self protection, all doing such fine team work as to move as one man; here is a condition that makes it possible for God to work through men.

V. 18. "And the builders, every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded. And he that sounded the trumpet was by me."

The use of the trumpet was like a great voice of a commander calling for action. For any advanced movement, there must be a voice that is heard and heeded and there is no voice like the voice of God.

V. 20. "In whatsoever place ye hear the sound of the trumpet, report yet hither unto us; our God will fight for us." They were separated for their work but in the hour of crisis, they must stand together; they had the assurance that when they stood together, every man at his best, that God would do what they could not accomplish.

V. 21. "So we wrought in the work; and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared."

The constant emphasis is on work; the secret of success is hard work; with work goes watchfulness, faithfulness, loyalty, earnestness, sincerity and faith in God.

Dr. Hugh Black says, "In its essence great courage like Nehemiah's, is great faith. It was because he believed in God, and believed that he was doing God's will, that he was able to rise above selfish fears. This is the secret of strength."

Dr. William L. Watkinson says, "Nehemiah could not commit sacrilege by fleeing into the temple to save his life; he felt that he was a temple himself, and that the God-dwelling, overshadowing Deity would preserve him."

Dr. Robert A. Hume, missionary to India for fifty-two years died recently in Massachusetts. Dr. Hume was the first moderator of the United Churches of Northern India and was decorated by the Indian government many times, one decoration being the gold Kaiser I Hand medal.

The city of Washington with 500,000 population, has 237,871 church members, the largest percentage of any great city in America.

Dr. Robert A. Hume, missionary to India for fifty-two years died recently in Massachusetts. Dr. Hume was the first moderator of the United Churches of Northern India and was decorated by the Indian government many times, one decoration being the gold Kaiser I Hand medal.

From sunrise to sunset and even far into the night there is heard the music of the hammer and the plow—a mighty chorus of men laboring to make a better world in which to live.

The humming motor of the airplane, the thundering noise of the last express, the creaking machinery of the factory, the comforts and luxuries of the home find their genesis in the minds and the muscles of men shaping ideas into the fast monuments that will long outlive the generations that made them.

It is only by labor that we can ultimately achieve; Labor that has raised us from the jungles; Labor that will build the future welfare.

There is no rest from labor earth.

Man is born to work; there is eternity in work to rest.

Man rarely lacks the power to work when he possesses the will.

From sunrise to sunset and even far into the night there is heard the music of the hammer and the plow—a mighty chorus of men laboring to make a better world in which to live.

The humming motor of the airplane, the thundering noise of the last express, the creaking machinery of the factory, the comforts and luxuries of the home find their genesis in the minds and the muscles of men shaping ideas into the fast monuments that will long outlive the generations that made them.

It is only by labor that we can ultimately achieve; Labor that has raised us from the jungles; Labor that will build the future welfare.

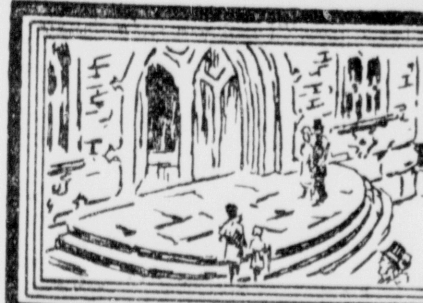

There is no rest from labor earth.

Without labor there would be no case, no rest.

LABOR AND PRAYER

"Labor is of noble birth but prayer the daughter of heaven; Labor has a place near the throne but prayer sits at the feet of Jesus. Labor climbs the mountain peak with Moses, but prayer soars upward with Elijah in a chariot of fire. Labor has the raven's wing, yet sometimes goes forth in vain; prayer has the wings of a dove and never returns but with the olive leaf of blessing."—Grover.

The Church is the house of prayer and fosters a program of activity to bring Christ's kingdom on earth. WHY NOT ACCEPT THE INVITATION AND COME TO CHURCH NEXT SUNDAY?—D. Carl Yoder.

Nehemiah was a man of great ability and indomitable will and above all of piety and prayer, of inflexible faith and heroic faithfulness. This lesson shows what one man of prayer and purpose, fire and force can do. He organized and energized his associates to do what they thought could not be done.

V. 1. "Hear, O our God; for we are despised; and turn back their reproach upon their own head; and give them up for a spoil in the land of captivity." This prayer is directed toward those who conspired to fight his organization of men engaged in the rebuilding of the wall of Jerusalem. Jerusalem could be rebuilt only at the cost of a battle in which is suggested the cost of building the kingdom of God today.

V. 6. "So we built the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto half the height thereof; for the people had a mind to work." This work was co-operative accomplishment, each one encouraging the other by doing his best; all true work calls for true heartedness.

V. 15. "And it came to pass when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, and God had brought their counsel to naught, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one to his work." Though Nehemiah and his men did their best, all credit was given to God from whom all power is given.

V. 17. "They that builded the walls and they that bare burdens laded themselves; everyone with his own hands wrought in the work, and with the other held his weapon." Here is a combination of prayer, work and self protection. All doing such fine team work as to move as one man; here is a condition that makes it possible for God to work through men.

V. 18. "And the builders, every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded. And he that sounded the trumpet was by me." The use of the trumpet was like a great voice of a commander calling for action. For any advanced movement, there must be a voice that is heard and heeded and there is no voice like the voice of God.

V. 20. "In whatsoever place ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us; our God will fight for us." They were separated for their work but in the hour of crisis, they must stand together; they had the assurance that when they stood together, every man at his best, that God would do what they could not accomplish.

V. 21. "So we wrought in the work; and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared." The constant emphasis is on work; the secret of success is hard work; with work goes watchfulness, faithfulness, loyalty, earnestness, sincerity and faith in God.

Dr. Hugh Black says, "In its essence great courage like Nehemiah's, is great faith. It was because he believed in God, and believed that he was doing God's will, that he was able to rise above selfish fears. This is the secret of strength."

Dr. William L. Watkinson says, "Nehemiah could not commit sin; he was fleeing into the temple to save his life; he felt that he was a temple himself, and that the dwelling, overshadowing Delty would preserve him."

1. Give instances of successful prayers as recorded in the Bible.

2. What are the essential points in a good prayer?

3. How account for the people having "a mind to work?"

4. Why is it not right to use physical force for spiritual ends?

5. What are the chief weapons in a religious warfare?

6. What was the secret of Nehemiah's prayer?

7. What walls are we building in the world?

Rev. Edgar Work says, "Many say the wall is great; it will go on. I shall not be missed. Yes the work is great, but it ceases any moment any workman comes from the wall. If we could realize that our unfaithfulness in some minor duty in reality causes God's work to cease, it would almost terrify us to think of deserting any post of duty."

LESSON PRAYER
"Help us to realize the meaning of being co-laborers together with God and forbid that we should shrink doing the least duty that is ours to perform."

THE CRAFTSMAN'S HYMN
I hold with none who think not work a boon,
Vouchsafed to man that he may aid his kind
With offerings from his chisel, wheel or loom
Fashioned with loving hand and loving mind.

All of the fine traditions and the skill,
Come from my elders through the long line down,
Are mine to use, to raise our craft's renown,
And mine to teach again with reverent will.

Thus do I live to serve, tho' least for pay,
With fingers that are masters of the tool,
And eyes which light to see the pattern's play
As it unfolds, obedient to each rule of our dear Art.

So all my craft is praise to God—at once part homage and part song,
My work's my prayer, I sing the whole day long,
As Faith and Beauty shape the forms I raise.—Haney.

boys and decided to make his teaching for a while by the actual problems and questions of the boys. The first question asked was, "What does God want me to do with my life?" another "What is the meaning of the Lord's Prayer, the Lord's Supper?" and "How can I pray?" Even in the narrowest meaning of the term religious, these boys were not passing it by and the teacher was wise enough to follow through each question by the use of the Bible and other source materials long enough to arrive at some definite and workable conclusions. This method is certainly preferable to aimless discussion on an assigned subject which may or may not be of particular interest to the group at that time.

The Theater

A small, bedraggled, gaily timid object, which serves nightly to set Broadway audiences off into spasms of laughter, has made its appearance in "Murray Anderson's Almanac," the first revue of the new theatrical season.

The name of the odd apparition is Jimmy Savo. It is a name to remember. Jimmie Savo, after years of being squelched by other people's ideas, has been turned loose at last, to take a full sized stage alone and hold it if he can. As a result Anderson may receive credit some day for discovering a new Chaplin.

Savo's charm, like Chaplin's and Harry Langdon's, is hard to describe. It mostly lies in his manner, which psychologists have neatly classified "defeatist com-

The only trouble with Jimmy Savo was that odd, indefinable something—he hadn't found his audience. Now, at 34, he is again a howling success. A large part of his comedy of eye-lifting and sudden retreats, he says is "spontaneous." Maybe it is.

It is true, however, that in his adventures behind the footlights, Savo is plainly working himself up to some bold coup—some grand gesture in love, perhaps—only to admit futility at the last possible moment. This type of fun-making requires exquisite pantomime and a climax of a flight before hard facts, with the remnants of dignity retained only through heart-rending nimbleness.

There is not a wise crack in a carload of Savonjokes—a trait which has no doubt proved a handicap to the comedian so far but for which he should be thankful. Although now enjoying the greatest opportunity of his career, Savo has been in New York exactly thirty-four years and one month. He was born there July 31, 1894. No one else in the family ever evidenced any histrionic tendency.

Savo was an expert juggler as a child. Also he entertained the Savo family and neighbors with comedy songs. When he was ten he was inspired to appear at an

DREDS

THE fire is out, and spent the warmth thereof,
(This is the end of every song man sings!)
The golden wine is drunk, the dregs remain,
Bitter as wormwood and as salt as pain;
And health and hope have gone the way of love
Into the drear oblivion of lost things.
Ghosts go along with us until the end;
This was a mistress, this, perhaps, a friend.
With pale, indifferent eyes, we sit and wait
For the dropped curtain and the closing gate:
This is the end of all the songs man sings.

DAUGHTER AWAITS FATHER LOST ON SHIP

resumed, with a forlorn attempt at confidence.

"In all his years before the mast and in steam he was never in one single accident.

"He is so jovial and good-natured and full of fun, my father. It has been wonderful to be with him all the time since he quit the sea. But he always longed for it, and when the chance came to take the good old San Juan out through the head just once more he couldn't resist it, and I didn't have the heart to ask him to stay ashore.

"He loves the sea. That is why we live so close to it, you see."

Carolyn said her father had commanded the shipping board freighter St. Helens during the war, carrying food and supplies between the United States, England and France.

She was not notified of the terse message that came over the air from the steamer lane off Pigeon Point through the curtain fog that masks the resting place of the San Juan.

"I'll be down at the docks when my dad comes back to port," she said.

CHATTY

By BEATRICE BURTON, Author of "HER MAN," "HONEY LOU," "SALLY'S SHOULDER," "MONEY LOVE," "LOVE BOUND," etc.

COPYRIGHT 1929, CENTRAL PRESS ASSN. INC., CLEVELAND, OHIO.

READ THIS FIRST:
Charlotte Chatterton, nicknamed Chatty, is a born gossip and busy body. She loses her job in Mrs. Mayberry's millinery because she talked too much. Her widowed mother, a dressmaker, has one wealthy customer, Mrs. Van Nuy, an old friend. Through Mrs. Van Nuy, Chatty gets a new job in Mr. Van's bond house, down town. There she meets and falls in love with Dave Jordan, a bond salesman, whom she once saw buying flowers for a girl in a shop near Mrs. Mayberry's store.
Billie Langenau, in charge of the files, tells Chatty that sometimes Agnes goes to lunch with Mr. Van's secretary, Agnes Herford. When Chatty tells Agnes the story, she adds it and says that Billie also said that Agnes and Jordan were crazy about each other, Agnes threatens to go to Billie with the story, and Chatty worries about it.
Finally she steals Agnes' desk keys and goes through her desk, trying to find a note she has seen Dave hand to her. The note is innocent enough, but Chatty finds Agnes' diary while she is hunting for it—and in the diary is the whole story of Agnes' love for Mr. Van. Chatty tears out the pages at home that night and sends them to Mrs. Van. Agnes does not discover the theft at once.
Billie and her sister, Sara, come to live across the hall from the Chattertons, and Chatty learns that she is separated, but still married to a man named Brewster. However, no one knows this, including George Mayhew, a bond salesman, who is in love with Billie. Billie insists that she feels only friendship for George, but one night when Chatty reports that she has seen him out with another girl, Billie bursts into tears.
Chatty has a "date" for that same evening with Dave Jordan, and Billie, who is kindness itself, always helps her dress herself for it. Chatty is ashamed of her little flat where she lives with her mother and young brother, Pud. She is particularly ashamed of Pud, who works afternoons and evenings in Tomlinson's drug store, helping the owner sell alcohol and gin. Chatty has begged him not to do this, especially since she knows that he sells his goods to Winnie Talcott, a stenographer at the office. So far she has kept Pud out of the room when Dave is at the flat.
(Now Go On With The Story)

CHAPTER XVI
Once again, the front room was in apple pie order for the coming of "Chatty's young man," as Mrs. Chatterton had begun to call David Jordan already.
Swelling with pride that every mother feels when her daughter is having her first love affair, she had come to work that day to make the little place look its very best—and it did look it now, as Chatty stood in the doorway, taking it in with pleased and happy eyes.
The curtains had been "done up" and they were white as snowdrifts in the windows. The sewing machine was hidden away in the closet off the hall. There was a strip of flowery new silk under the lamp that glowed on the table in the middle of the room. A wood fire sang and crackled in the brass-rod grate.
"And that's the very place to put Agnes' diary!" The thought struck Chatty suddenly, as she stood there looking at it. "In two minutes it'll be nothing but smoke going up the chimney—and there won't be a single thing anywhere to prove that I took that diary!"
All day long the diary or what was left of it—had lain under a pile of neatly-folded undergarments in the bottom drawer of the dresser in the bedroom.
And all day long Chatty had worried about it, wondering if her mother would go into that drawer and find it before she got home.
"I never should have put it there last night—and then forgotten it this morning," Chatty told herself, as she opened the door of the bedroom.
Mrs. Chatterton stood before the dresser, brushing her hair and twisting it up in the old-fashioned pompadour that she always wore.
"I'm afraid I can't stay to say 'Good evening' to your young man, Chatty," she said, turning away from the glass for a moment. "Kate Van Nuy's telephone just a couple of minutes ago and asked me to come over as if she were in trouble of some sort, and she's sending her car after me."
Chatty's heart began to pound like a trip hammer in her breast. She knew, of course, what Mrs. Van's trouble was. She knew that she had read the part of the diary that she had sent her—and that she was taking the news of Mr. Van's friendship with Agnes hard.
Her eyes flew to the bottom drawer of the old dresser. It was closed, thank goodness. "I'm safe," she thought, "but I'll have to burn that thing the minute mother leaves the house!"
She remembered that it had Agnes' name written neatly upon the flyleaf.
"And mother's so honest, that if she knew I'd taken that diary she'd tell Mrs. Van that I had—as soon as she found out that Mrs. Van had the pages I tore out of it," Chatty went on thinking.
But her face was as expressionless as a mask, as she helped her mother with her dressing.
"Maybe Mrs. Van's sick. You'd better hurry, mother!" she said. "And as soon as you're ready, why don't you run downstairs and wait for the automobile in the street? I'll save time."
Anything to get her mother out of the flat before Dave Jordan arrived! Anything to have the five minutes alone she needed to get the diary out of the drawer and into the fireplace! Anything!
"And I'm not going down into any street to wait for a chauffeur with a cap!" Mrs. Chatterton told of gin here that you can in any low-down speakeasy in town, too," Dave said grimly, when he and Chatty were having their coffee.

He pulled out his watch and looked at it.
"It's half past nine," he went on. "In another hour this place will be waking up—and by twelve things will be moving pretty fast. It's no place for a nice girl then, believe me."
All the way home they talked about prohibition, and Chatty kept wondering what he would think of her if he knew that she had a young brother who sold liquor to the kind of people who come out to the Lollypop Inn late at night and made things "move pretty fast."
But when the car drew up to the curb in the shadow of the maple tree in front of the Lipton street apartment, Chatty forgot all about Pud and all about her other worries and fears. For Dave took her in his arms, just as he had taken her in them the night before, and he kissed her again.
"You're the sweetest thing on earth," he said to her huskily, as they went up the stairs to the second floor landing. And there he kissed her again.
"How CAN life be so wonderful all of a sudden?" Chatty asked herself, lying awake in bed for a long time that night.
* * *

the squeak of a door opening behind her, and swung around to see if it were Dave coming in.
But it was not Dave. It was Agnes Herford. She had opened the door of her own small office, and she was coming across the big room to Chatty. In her hands was a small black-covered book.
"Look!" she gasped. "My diary! Somebody's torn out part of it! You were here late on Monday night. The night I lost my desk key, you know? Did you see anybody go into my office?"
Chatty shook her smooth, little golden head. "I didn't see a soul," she answered, as calmly as if she were telling the truth.

The Theater

A small, bedraggled, gaily timid object, which serves nightly to set Broadway audiences off into spasms of laughter, has made its appearance in "Murray Anderson's Almanac," the first revue of the new theatrical season.

The name of the odd apparition is Jimmy Savo. It is a name to remember. Jimmie Savo, after years of being squelched by other people's ideas, has been turned loose at last, to take a full sized stage alone and hold it if he can. As a result Anderson may receive credit some day for discovering a new Chaplin.

Savo's charm, like Chaplin's and Harry Langdon's, is hard to describe. It mostly lies in his manner, which psychologists have neatly classified "defeatist com-atateur night at Hurtig and Seamon's Music Hall in 125th St. Joe Cook, Fannie Brice and George White were on the same bill. Little Jimmy Savo, the juggler, was a hit and he was engaged for the regular bill. To play the matinee, he ducked school. A success at ten, he has just kept the wolf from the door since. He has been applauded by thousands in vaudeville. He has appeared in movies. He was featured in "Vogues and Vanities," the "Ritz Revue," "Artists and Models" and was all set to knock them dead in "Strike Up the Band" when that piece was tried out—then readjusted.

The only trouble with Jimmy Savo was that odd, indefinable something—he hadn't found his audience. Now, at 34, he is again a howling success. A large part of his comedy of eye-lifting and sudden retreats, he says is "spontaneous." Maybe it is.

Twenty Years '09- Ago -'29

Mr. C. F. Ridenour, of the Gazette, is off on his vacation. He expects to visit Cedar Point, Detroit, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and return home by the way of Cleveland.

A valuable team of horses, belonging to Charles McPherson, was struck by a C. H. and D. train at the Bellbrook Pike crossing, injuring one of the animals so badly that it had to be shot.

plex," without getting too near the secret. It is true, however, that in his adventures behind the footlights, Savo is plainly working himself up to some bold coup—some grand gesture in love, perhaps only to admit futility at the last possible moment. This type of fun-making requires exquisite pantomime and a climax of a flight before hard facts, with the remnants of dignity retained only through heart-rending nimbleness.

There is not a wise crack in a carload of Savonjokes—a trait which has no doubt proved a handicap to the comedian so far but for which he should be thankful. Although now enjoying the greatest opportunity of his career, Savo has been in New York exactly thirty-four years and one month. He was born there July 31, 1894. No one else in the family ever evidenced any histrionic tendency.

Savo was an expert juggler as a child. Also he entertained the Savo family and neighbors with comedy songs. When he was ten he was inspired to appear at an

DREDS

THE fire is out, and spent the warmth thereof,
(This is the end of every song man sings!)
The golden wine is drunk, the dreds remain,
Bitter as wormwood and as salt as pain;
And health and hope have gone the way of love
Into the drear oblivion of lost things.
Ghosts go along with us until the end;
This was a mistress, this, perhaps, a friend.
With pale, indifferent eyes, we sit and wait
For the dropped curtain and the closing gate:
This is the end of all the songs man sings.

READ THIS FIRST:

Charlotte Chatterton, nicknamed Chatty, is a born gossip and busy body. She loses her job in Mrs. Mayberry's millinery because she talked too much. Her widowed mother, a dressmaker, has one wealthy customer, Mrs. Van Nuys, an old friend. Through Mrs. "Van" Chatty gets a new job in Mr. "Van's" bond house, down town. There she meets and falls in love with Dave Jordan, a bond salesman, whom she once saw buying flowers for a girl in a shop near Mrs. Mayberry's store.

Billie Langeau, in charge of the files, tells Chatty that sometimes Jordan goes to lunch with Mr. "Van's" secretary, Agnes Herford. When Chatty tells Agnes the story, she adds to it, and says that Billie also said that Agnes and Jordan were crazy about each other. Agnes threatens to go to Billie with the story, and Chatty worries about it.

Finally she steals Agnes' desk keys and goes through her desk, trying to find a note she has seen Dave hand to her. The note is innocent enough, but Chatty finds Agnes' diary while she is hunting for it—and in the diary is the whole story of Agnes' love for Mr. Van. Chatty tears out the pages at home that night and sends them to Mrs. Van. Agnes does not discover the theft at once.

Billie and her sister, Sara, come to live across the hall from the Chattertons, and Chatty learns that she is separated, but still married to a man named Brewster. However, no one knows this, including George Mayhew, a bond salesman, who is in love with Billie. Billie insists that she feels only friendship for George, but one night when Chatty reports that she has seen him out with another girl, Billie bursts into tears.

Chatty has a "date" for that same evening with Dave Jordan, and Billie, who is kindness itself, always helps her dress herself for it. Chatty is ashamed of her little flat where she lives with her mother and young brother, Pud. She is particularly ashamed of Pud, who works afternoons and evenings in Tomlinson's drug store, helping the owner sell alcohol and gin. Chatty has begged him not to do this, especially since she knows that he sells his goods to Winnie Talcott, a stenographer at the office. So far she has kept Pud out of the room when Dave is at the flat.

CHAPTER XVI

Once again, the front room was in apple pie order for the coming of "Chatty's young man," as Mrs. Chatterton had begun to call David Jordan already.

Swelling with pride that every mother feels when her daughter is having her first love affair, she had gone to work that day to make the little place look its very best—and it did look it now, as Chatty stood in the doorway, taking it in with pleased and happy eyes.

The curtains had been "done up" and they were white as snowdrifts in the windows. The sewing machine was hidden away in the closet off the hall. There was a strip of flowery new silk under the lamp that glowed on the table in the middle of the room. A wood fire sang and crackled in the brass-rodded grate.

"And that's the very place to put Agnes' diary!" The thought struck Chatty suddenly, as she stood there looking at it. "In two minutes it'll be nothing but smoke going up the chimney—and there won't be a single thing anywhere to prove that I took that diary!"

All day long the diary or what was left of it—had lain under a pile of neatly-folded undergarments in the bottom drawer of the dresser in the bedroom.

And all day long Chatty had worried about it, wondering if her mother would go into that drawer and find it before she got home.

"I never should have put it there last night—and then forgotten it this morning," Chatty told herself, as she opened the door of the bedroom.

Mrs. Chatterton stood before the dresser, brushing her hair and twisting it up in the old-fashioned pompadour that she always wore.

"I'm afraid I can't stay to say 'Good evening' to your young man, Chatty," she said, turning away from the glass for a moment. "Kate Van Nuys telephoned just a couple of minutes ago and asked me to come over to her house. . . . She sounded as if she were in trouble of some sort, and she's sending her car after me."

Chatty's heart began to pound like a trip hammer in her breast. She knew, of course, what Mrs. Van's trouble was. She knew that she had read the part of the diary that she had sent her—and that she was taking the news of Mr. Van's friendship with Agnes hard.

Her eyes flew to the bottom drawer of the old dresser. It was closed, thank goodness. "I'm safe," she thought, "but I'll have to burn that thing the minute mother leaves the house!"

She remembered that it had Agnes' name written neatly upon the flyleaf.

"And mother's so honest, that if she knew I'd taken that diary she'd tell Mrs. Van that I had—as soon as she found out that Mrs. Van had the pages I took out of it," Chatty went on thinking.

But her face was as expressionless as a mask as she helped her mother with her dressing.

"Maybe Mrs. Van's sick. You'd better hurry, mother!" she said. "And as soon as you're ready, why don't you run downstairs and wait for the automobile in the street? It'll save time."

Anything to get her mother out of the flat before Dave Jordan arrived! Anything to have the five minutes alone she needed to get the diary out of the drawer and into the fireplace! Anything!

"Indeed, I'm not going down into any street to wait for a chauffeur with a car!" Mrs. Chatterton told her. "I'll stay right here until the bell rings. It won't take me thirty seconds to get down those stairs!"

She was putting on her hat when the bell finally did ring at exactly seven. The instant she was out of the room Chatty had the bottom drawer open and the black covered book in her hands. She was on her way to the front room with it when she heard Dave Jordan's voice:

"How do you do, Mrs. Chatterton?"

With a groan Chatty backed in to the bedroom.

Her handbag lay open on the bed beside the neat, clean, white chamoisette gloves that her mother had washed out for her. She had just time to slip the diary into it before Mrs. Chatterton came hurrying back into the room to tell her that her "young man" had come for her.

As Chatty started down the narrow hall to the front room, Pud came to the door of his own room. He stood there, looking at her, and as she passed him he spoke to her in a hoarse whisper:

"Is that big Whozis of yours here again?"

"Sssh!" said Chatty, and she nodded her head. "Be careful—he'll hear you!"

Pud cocked his eye at her. "I thought he was here. That's why I came in here instead of going in to the front room—because you're ashamed of me."

In spite of his loud necktie, his wide-striped shirt, and his long pants, Pud was only fifteen—and Chatty could see that he was hurt. "I'm not ashamed of you—I'm ashamed of what you're doing down at Ben Tomlinson's store!" she whispered to him, fiercely.

"You were out late again last night with him—and if it doesn't stop I'm going to report Ben to the 'dry agent' down town."

She went on down the hall, thinking that Pud was the skeleton in the closet of the Chatterton house. . . . just as there is a skeleton in every house in the world. Someone or something that every family is ashamed of.

But by the time she reached the door of the front room she was smiling as if she hadn't a dark secret or a trouble in the whole wide world.

She held out both of her hands to him. "It's so wonderfully nice to see you TWICE in one day!" she told him, and she gave a little sigh that was the softest, happiest sound she had ever made in her life.

And she was happy that night! For months afterward she looked back on that night with Dave Jordan as the way we look back at the summer sunshine on some bleak, gray day in winter.

"I'm going to take you out to that funny little inn, where I took you last night," he said to her when they were in the gray-snob-nosed reaster and leaving the town behind them.

"To the Lollypop Inn?" asked Chatty, cheerfully. "I don't think it's funny. I think it's a sweet little darling place!"

Dave chuckled. "You wouldn't think so if you could see it late on Saturday night, some time," he said. "It's about the wildest little lunatic asylum then that you'd ever wish to see—"

"Let's go out and see it, then, some Saturday night!" Chatty clapped her hands like an excited child. "I've never seen a really wild place in my life—and I'm dying to!"

Dave Jordan shook his head. "No—I'm not going to take you to any wild scenes anywhere," he said soberly. "You see, Chatty, one reason I like you so much is that you're not like some of these girls who've painted and powdered and smoked and run around since they were fifteen. You're different. You're decent and you're sweet."

"You sound like a reformer on a lecture tour," cried Chatty, and she began to giggle because she didn't want Dave to see how seriously she was taking all this that he told her. . . . How much his opinion of her mattered to her.

"Never mind how I sound! You listen to me!" Dave Jordan answered, in his bluff, quick way. "You're attractive because there's nothing 'wild' as you call it, about you, Chatty."

"Am I attractive to you?" "In the darkness Dave Jordan put out his left arm and drew her close against him. "I'm afraid you are," he said quietly. "I'm afraid I'm falling in love with you. What am I to do about it?"

Chatty sighed. "I thought you were in love with the girl who wouldn't marry anybody but a ten thousand dollar a year man," she murmured, wistfully. "That girl I saw you buying flowers for on Easter Saturday. You go to see her sometimes, don't you?"

There was silence between them for a minute or two. "I won't see her any more if you don't want me to," Dave Jordan said, and Chatty couldn't believe her ears.

She kept thinking it over, nestling against him in the cool rushing darkness. "He must really be in love with me—a little bit. Or he wouldn't have said that," she figured.

"The Lollypop Inn was small and white. It had a green shingle roof and green shutters. There were green pine trees all around it, and a white picket fence ran along the front of its broad green lawn."

of gin here that you can in any low-down speaky in town, too," Dave said grimly, when he and Chatty were having their coffee.

He pulled out his watch and looked at it.

"It's half past nine," he went on. "In another hour this place will be waking up—and by twelve things will be moving pretty fast. It's no place for a nice girl then, believe me!"

All the way home they talked about prohibition, and Chatty kept wondering what he would think of her if he knew that she had a young brother who sold liquor to the kind of people who came out to the Lollypop Inn late at night and made things "move pretty fast."

But when the car drew up to the curb in the shadow of the maple tree in front of the Lipton street apartment, Chatty forgot all about Pud and all about her other worries and fears. For Dave took her in his arms, just as he had taken her in them the night before, and he kissed her again.

"You're the sweetest thing on earth," he said to her huskily, as they went up the stairs to the second floor landing. And there he kissed her again.

"How CAN life be so wonderful all of a sudden?" Chatty asked herself, lying awake in bed for a long time that night.

It was not until she was ready for work the next morning that she missed her handbag.

And then she spent five minutes hunting all over the flat for it before she remembered that she had tucked it into a corner of Dave Jordan's Pride of America the night before.

The thought made her go cold and sick all over. . . . Suppose he had opened it, and found that torn diary of Agnes Herford's in it! Her name was written in it, too, Chatty remembered.

"Oh, I hope he hasn't opened it!" Chatty found herself actually praying that he hadn't, all the way down town.

But he was nowhere in sight when she opened the door of the office at half past eight.

She took off her things and sat down at her switchboard to wait for him.

After a minute or two she heard the squeak of a door opening behind her, and swung around to see if it were Dave coming in.

But it was not Dave. It was Agnes Herford. She had opened the door of her own small office, and she was coming across the big room to Chatty. In her hands was a small black-covered book.

"Look!" she gasped. "My diary! Somebody's torn out part of it! You were here late on Monday night. The night I lost my desk key, you know? Did you see anybody go into my office?"

Chatty shook her smooth, little golden head. "I didn't see a soul," she answered, as calmly as if she were telling the truth.
